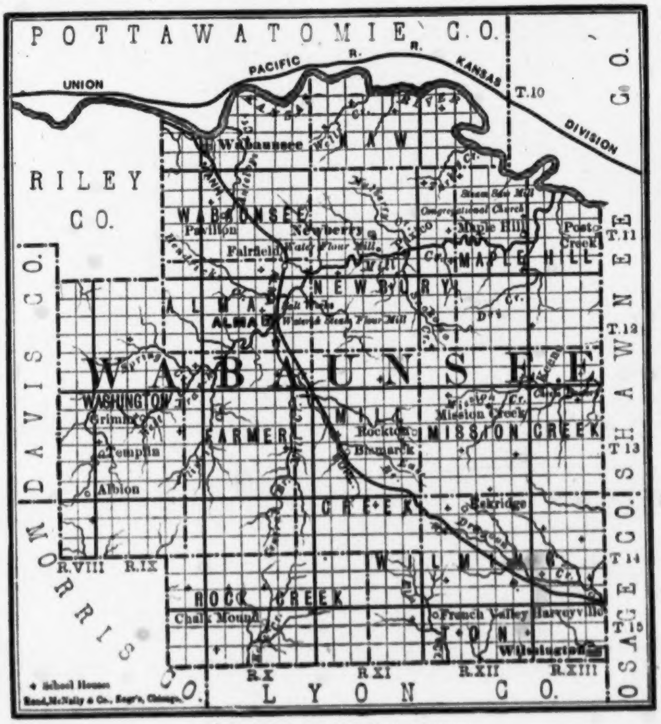
WABAUNSEE COUNTY.

TOPOGRAPHICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE.

WABAUNSEE County is located about midway between the north and south lines of the State, and about seventy-five miles west of the Missouri River. The county is bounded on the north by the Kansas River, on the south by Lyon County, on the east by Shawnee County, and on the west by Davis County and a portion of Morris and Riley Counties. The north line of the county follows the sinuous course of the Kansas River, by which it presents a rather rugged and irregular appearance, the northeast corner being six miles farther south than the northwest corner, and the center of the north line being about three miles still farther north than the northwest corner. The east line of the county is perfectly perpendicular and the south line horizontal, these two lines forming a regular right angle. As the county was originally established, it embraced, in addition to its present territory, a portion of what is now Riley and Morris Counties. By enactment of the Territorial Legislature in 1870, the greater portion of Zeandale Township, which was at that time the northwest township of the county, was set off from Wabaunsee and annexed to the county of Riley; and by the same enactment a tract of land about six miles square was severed from the southwest corner of Wabaunsee and annexed to Morris County. By this severance of territory the west boundary line of the county lost its uniformity, and represents the side of a square with two smaller squares taken from the northwest and southwest corners.



The topography of the county is very much broken and uneven, but much more so in the central than in any other portion. Along the boundary lines of the county the country is more level, and the undulations more gradual, but in the central portion the acclivities are abrupt and high and the declivities sudden and deep. It can not be called rolling or undulating prairie, and I know of no word more appropriate to express the topography of the center of the county than "bluffy." It is one continuous chain of bluffs, some higher than the others.

Numerous streams and creeks also break the face of the country, and on the banks of these water courses some very fine timber grows, consisting of several varieties, chief among which are oak, hickory, walnut, cottonwood and sycamore. These belts of timber vary in width from less than one-fourth to one-half mile, and furnish ample fuel. The flat lands lying along these streams and creeks are denominated "bottom" lands, the soil of which is exceedingly rich and productive, nine successive crops of wheat having been taken from some of them without a change or a failure. These creek valleys are not very wide, running from one-half to about one and one-half miles in width. It is seldom that these valleys extend from both sides of the streams along which they lie, the valley being sometimes on one side of the stream and sometimes on the other, upland and bottom land alternating according to the winding of the water course. On one side will be a long stretch of bottom land, while from the other rises abrupt, high bluffs. The sinuosity of the streams gives a peculiar formation to the character of the surface, causing the low lands along their margins to assume the shape of basins. By far the greater portion of the county is upland prairie, which is used chiefly for stock ranges, and which affords excellent pasturage; agriculture being confined almost entirely to the bottom lands along the creeks.

The water courses by which the county is meandered are numerous, all of which are denominated creeks, and to each of which is given a particular name. The largest stream in the county is Mill Creek, to which many of the smaller streams are tributary. There are three branches of Mill Creek, named respectively, East Branch, West Branch, and South Branch. These branches are fed by still smaller branches, the largest of which are Illinois Creek and Spring Creek, which flow into the West Branch, while a few lesser creeks are tributary to the East Branch. The East Branch and South Branch form a confluence about four miles south of Alma, from which point the course of the stream is northward. The West Branch and Spring Creek take their rise in Washington Township, which is the western township of the county; Illinois Creek and the South Branch take their rise in Farmer Township, which adjoins Washington Township on the east; and the rise of East Branch is in Mill Creek Township, at a point near Bismark. The East and West Branches, after receiving the waters of their tributaries, form a junction at Alma, from which point it takes the name of Mill Creek proper, and runs east by north until it empties into the Kansas River at the northeast corner of the county. After passing Alma it receives the water of Henry's Creek, which has its rise in Wabaunsee Township, and still further east Mulberry Creek and Snokomo Creek, add their tribute, both of which have their rise in Newbury Township, Mulberry running from the north and Snokomo from the south, while Maple Hill Township helps to swell the current by adding the water of Dry Creek. Rising at almost the western boundary line of the county, and flowing in a northeasterly direction across the entire county until it empties into the Kaw or Kansas River at the northeast corner, Mill Creek forms the most important stream in the county. It is not the only stream, however, as in the southeast portion of the county there is Dragoon Creek and Elm Creek, both of which have their rise in Wilmington Township, and flowing in a southeasterly direction, become tributaries of the Osage or Marais des Cygnes River. In the southeastern portion of the county there is Rock Creek, which has its rise in the township bearing the same name, and which, flowing in a southwesterly direction, winds its way until it becomes lost in the greater waters of the Neosho River. In the northern portion of the county there is Antelope Creek and Wells Creek, the former rising in Wabaunsee Township and the latter in Kaw Township, both of which run north and are tributary to the Kansas River. Mission Creek is another stream in the eastern portion of the county which rises in Mission Creek Township, the course of which is due east until it enters the Kansas River, about twelve miles west of the city of Topeka, the capital of the State. Excepting a few minor streamlets, which occasionally furnish water where cattle may drink, the streams and creeks described constitute the water system of the county.

The character of the soil differs in quality according to localities. That of the low or bottom lands is deep, rich, and fertile, ranging from two to ten feet in depth, while that of the uplands is shallow, and very uncertain as to crops. The soil of the bottom lands along Mill Creek and its tributaries is exceptionally rich and fertile, as also is that of the Kansas Valley in the northern portion of the county. In the low lands which lie along the streams and creeks, the soil is alluvial in character, and has been formed by sedimentary deposits resulting from recurring overflows, to which has been added washings of earth from the adjoining uplands, and also the accretions rising from decomposed vegetable matter. The depth of the soil varies with the width of the valleys, it being much deeper where the valley is narrow than where it is wide. These valleys constitute the chief farming lands of the county. On the uplands the soil runs from six to fifteen inches in depth, excepting upon the higher bluffs, which are usually found to be faced with a flat limestone, which in many cases covers the surface, while in others it is to be found from two to six inches, and sometimes more, beneath the surface. In many localities, where the ground is not so broken and bluffy as it is in the central portion of the county, and where the prairie, although upland, is more undulating, and the acclivities and declivities are not so abrupt, there are numerous spots of excellent farming land which are, as yet, uncultivated, and which are devoted to grazing and haying purposes. The difference between the soil of the upland and that of the low land is not so much in quality as in quantity, as where in the former case it is measured by inches, in the latter it is measured by feet. The uncertainty of the uplands for crops, except in unusually wet seasons, has caused settlers to locate chiefly on the low-lying lands along the streams and creeks; but while the upland prairie is almost destitute of settlement, there is not a single foot of the soil but that has passed into individual ownership, and while it is still unoccupied, it is nearly all under fence, and it is no unusual thing to see tracts containing thousands of acres embraced within one enclosure.

The products of the county are, mainly, agricultural, and consist of wheat, oats, corn, rye and barley. Within the past few years flax has been cultivated to some extent, and each year finds more attention given to its culture. Millet, timothy, hungarian and clover are also extensively cultivated, while from the soil, in its primitive and natural state, a superabundance of rich and nutritious grasses grow in great luxuriance. Fruit also is among the products that receive a great deal of care and attention, and in ordinary seasons, apples and peaches yield immense crops. Potatoes are raised in abundance, and no little care is given to the cultivation of esculents, such as turnips, beets, carrots, and other roots, but these chiefly, although cultivated and raised in large quantities, are mostly used for stock-feeding purposes. The chief products, however—that is, those that spring from the soil—are wheat, oats and corn, of which immense quantities find their way to Chicago, St. Louis, and other chief marts. Plums, cherries, and other small fruit, including grapes, strawberries, raspberries and currants, are raised quite extensively in the older settled portions of the county. In the timber along the streams and creeks, natural, or wild fruit, grows in abundance. This consists chiefly of wild plums, grapes, strawberries, mulberries, gooseberries, raspberries, blackberries and wild currants, while in some localities, after the trees have shed, walnuts and hickory nuts can be shoveled up by the bushel. Hay is a product of vast importance to the county, not only on account of the immense quantities cut and put up for feeding purposes during the winter months, but also on account of the amount transported out of the county, and which is a source of considerable revenue.

The mineral resources of the county, if there are any, are as yet undeveloped, excepting rock, consisting chiefly of various kinds of limestone, which is used extensively for building purposes and for fencing. Coal has been found in various parts of the county at different times, but of a very inferior quality, and so limited in thickness of vein as to preclude any attempt at successful operation.

But little or no attention has been devoted to the establishment of any manufacturing industries. For this there are several reasons, among which are, absence of railroad facilities, scarcity of fuel, paucity of population, and lack of material. If we except three cheese factories, two in Mission Creek Township, and one in Wabaunsee Township; the two flouring mills, already mentioned, and the salt works, we except all that has been attempted in the way of manufacturing. At present nothing is being done at the salt works, nor have they been in operation for some time past. That there is ample brine in the well, and of superior quality, has been established beyond a doubt, and that excellent salt has been there made when the works were in operation, to the amount of from twenty to thirty barrels a day, is a fact beyond dispute; but the facilities are lacking by which the operation of the works can be made profitable. It is true, however, that Wabaunsee from all natural appearances, was never designed for a manufacturing county, but there is no reason why an oil-mill and also a woolen-mill should not be established there in the near future. The water-power is there limited, it is true, and there is no county in the State better adapted to the cultivation of flax and the raising of sheep.

In the county there are some eight or nine good mill sites on Mill Creek, where ample power could be had for milling purposes. Only two of these are at present utilized, one being at Paxico, in Newbury Township, and the other in Alma Township, about one-half mile from the city. The former was constructed in 1880, by Strosch Bros., and the latter in 1858, by G. Zwanziger. Both of these are flouring mills, the former having three run of buhrs, two for flour and one for corn; and the latter four, three for flour and one for corn. The mill near Alma was the first built in the county, excepting one, built by the government for the use of the Indians, on the Pottawatomie Reservation. The government mill was washed out by high water in 1857, and was never rebuilt, and the following year Mr. Zwanziger erected his mill. In 1862 the ownership of the mill changed, Mr. Zwanziger selling out to the present proprietor, Mr. L. Pauly. As the population of the county increased, the mill became altogether inadequate to supply the demands of the people, and shortly after falling into Mr. Pauly's hands he doubled its capacity, and he is now taking steps to enlarge it still further. The system by which the stream is dammed in order to get the utmost power, is somewhat peculiar, and may be classed among those things that are set down as being much better understood by having been once seen than from any attempt at description. About a mile from where the mill stands, the east and west branches of the stream fork, and at this point the first dam is built. Close by the mill is another dam, and from this a race is constructed through which the water is conveyed to the mill where it falls a distance of twelve feet upon a forty-inch Lefelle wheel and thus its power is obtained. The size of the mill is 40x52 feet, it is three stories high; is solidly built, and its capacity is 800 bushels a day. The mill at Pasico is a very solid stone structure, and is fitted up with the most improved machinery. These two mills, however, are far from being adequate to the demands of the people, and at present a third flouring mill is being constructed farther down the stream in Maple Hill Township. It does not fall within the province of the writer to say what advantage may be taken of the idle water powers in time, but in a county where the wool of thousands upon thousands of sheep might be gathered annually, and where flax and hemp are of easy cultivation, to say that these unused powers will be utilized in the near future, might not be considered a wild prophecy.

There are no places in the county possessing any peculiar interest, either to the sojourner or traveler. As far as known there is no spot rendered historic, either in writing or tradition, as the place where hostile tribes of Indians met in deadly combat and renowned chiefs performed wonderful feats of valor and heroism. In this respect the history of the county is a blank. Nor has nature furnished the county with any of those wonderful places, either for beauty, grandeur, or health-imparting properties, which the seeker for pleasure, the tourist or the invalid desires to find. If Buffalo Mound and the old Mormon trail are excepted, the county is void of anything to which is attached any peculiar interest. What interest attaches to Buffalo Mound is derived from the fact that it is the highest point of land in the county, and in a county the greater portion of which is all high bluffs and hills, this makes the mound somewhat conspicuous. How it obtained its name no one seems to know, but its shape bears a stronger resemblance to the back of a dromedary than to anything else. The mound is in Maple Hill Township, and south of Mill Creek, and is the north end of a chain of high ridges that terminate on the south side of the creek. A person can obtain a better view of the surrounding country from this point than from any other in the county. From the top of the mound the view embraces a radius of forty miles, and is very beautiful. Away below you, stretching out east and west, is the Mill Creek valley with its oceans of corn and innumerable stacks of grain, and through the heavy belt of timber that marks the course of the stream, glimpses of the water can occasionally be had as it winds its serpentine way to join the waters of the Kaw. In front of you lies the town of Rossville, in Shawnee County, whose spires can be distinctly seen rising above the trees. Still further to the west, in Pottawatomie County, can be seen the town of St. Mary's, and, extending the gaze still further westward, a glimpse can be had of Wamego, and that spire of curling smoke that you see rising above the timber tells of a passing train on the Kansas Pacific Railway. Allow your gaze to travel in a southeasterly direction from Wamego for a distance of about forty miles, until you reach a point where the earth and sky seem to kiss, and if the day is bright and the atmosphere clear, you can sight Topeka, the capital of the State. It is the grand view it affords that compensates the traveler for climbing to its hight. The belief prevails among the people that Gen. J. C. Fremont, on his exploring expedition through the great West in 1838–39, camped upon the mound and planted the stars and stripes upon its highest point, and this belief, however founded, adds to its interest.

The Mormon trail leads through Wilmington Township a little south of Eskridge. There is nothing remarkable about it, nor is it possessed of any other interest than marking the way that Brigham Young and his followers took in marching through the unexplored regions of the West in search of a place where to found a city and erect temples, where Mormons could worship without further molestation from civilization and Christianity.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first collective settlement of which there is any authenticated account, is that made in Wabaunsee Township in 1854, although there were a few settlers in other portions of the county whose advent dates as far back, but not possessing that contiguity as to give them that distinctive feature by which a settlement is characterized. For instance, in Wilmington Township, in the southeast corner of the county, there was settled as early as 1854 Henry Harvey and one or two others; while in what is now Farmer Township we find that John P. Gleich settled as early as 1853, and in 1854 we find Peter Thoes, Frank Schmidt, R. Schrauder and C. Schwankee; but when it is borne in mind that at that time the county was not divided into civil townships and that these settlers were miles apart from each other, the fact of their having settled in the county did not give the respective localities where they located the character of a "settlement," or rather not that distinctive character which is ascribed to a collection of settlers in one immediate neighborhood, and since the settlement made in Wabaunsee Township in 1854, by Peter Sharra, Bartholomew Sharra, J. H. Nesbitt, Rev. Harvey Jones, D. B. Hiatt, J. M. Bisby, Clark Lapham, Joshua Smith, Robert Banks, Rev. Mr. Leonard, and probably a few others, assumed this distinctive feature, we give to it the credit of being the first collective settlement in Wabaunsee County. Following this came, April 1856, the "Beecher Rifle Company," or "New Haven Colony," as described by some. During the fall of 1855 and the winter of 1855–56, great excitement prevailed in the Free States over what was known as the Kansas-Nebraska Bill, during which time public meetings were held almost nightly, and the measure was strongly and bitterly denounced. Great enthusiasm was created among the people, and a spirit somewhat akin to that which took hold of the Colonists in 1776 seemed to be aroused throughout all of the Free States, but chiefly in New England.

It was during this winter, and when the feeling against the Nebraska Bill was at its highest, that the "Beecher Rifle Club" was formed at New Haven, Conn. The company first took shape on February 17, 1856, when C. B. Lines announced at a public meeting in New Haven his intention organize a colony, and at an early day start for Kansas to help make it a Free State. Books were opened the next day to receive the signatures those wishing to enroll, and in less than a week eighty-five names were subscribed, which was increased to ninety by the 7th day of March, 1856, on which day the organization held its first meeting. C. B. Lines was chosen president of the company. A few days before setting out on their journey westward, a meeting of the members, together with other citizens of New Haven, was held in the North Church, where they listened to an address delivered by Rev. H. W. Beecher. At the close of the address, C. B. Lines, as president of the organization, arose and gave a brief outline of the origin, aim and purpose of the company, reminding the audience that though about starting for a country where, in all probability, hard knocks would be interchanged, no provision had been made to furnish them with weapons, either offensive or defensive. Prof. Sillman, of Yale College, being in the audience, arose and made a short address, in which he appealed to the citizens to furnish the company with arms, and concluded by subscribing $25 for the purchase of a Sharp's rifle. He was followed by others until nearly enough was subscribed to purchase half the required number of rifles. Mr. Beecher then informed the audience that if half the number was furnished by the people, he would supply the other half. The first half of the number having been furnished, Mr. Beecher returned to his home, and, in a few days thereafter, forwarded to the president of the company $625 to purchase the rifles he had agreed to furnish, with which was also sent a Bible and hymn-book for each member of the company.

Thus was the Connecticut Kansas Colony equipped, and on the 31st day of March, 1856, they started from New Haven amidst many handshakings, farewell greetings, and oft-repeated "God bless you," and "God speed you," each man having a rifle on his shoulder and a Bible in his pocket, and from the active part taken by Mr. Beecher in the equipment of the colony, it became known as the "Beecher Rifle Company." Arriving at St. Louis, the company—which, by the way, was composed of preachers, teachers, doctors, merchants, mechanics and laborers—held a consultation as to future action. The result of their deliberations was, that a consolidated fund was raised. There was considerable money among the colonists, with which a large stock of groceries and other provisions were purchased, after which they took passage on board the steamer Clara, for Kansas City. At this place another meeting of the company was held, at which parties were detailed to go into the interior and purchase oxen, wagons, cows, etc., while another party was detailed to cross over into Kansas and look up a location for settlement.

All being in readiness, the colonists crossed over into Kansas, having, with thirty yoke of oxen, a suitable number of wagons, and many other articles deemed necessary for the successful establishment of their new home. Of the colonists, five had their families with them. Next day they reached Lawrence, where they halted for two or three days, and while there they were joined by the party who had been detailed to select a location, and who reported in favor of Wabaunsee, and the report being unanimously adopted, they struck camp and took up their westward march, arriving at the point of destination April 28, 1856, where they found that they had already been preceded by the settlement already mentioned as having gone there in 1854–55. The object of the colonists was to secure for each member of the company a farm, and also to locate a town site.

A large tent about twenty feet long was immediately made and erected, which served as a store, a meeting-house, and also as a home for several of the company. Prior to this time J. H. Nesbitt, of the 1854 settlers, had built and carried on a small store, which had been burned down shortly before the arrival of the Beecher Rifle Company. Some of the colonists, who were not sheltered in the large tent, put up tents for themselves, while others boarded with the families in the neighborhood. There being a goodly supply of timber in the immediate vicinity, log cabins soon began to spring up, and two of the company having purchased a saw-mill in Kansas City on their way West, after a few days' rest five wagons, with the requisite number of oxen, were sent back to bring the mill to the settlement. Luther H. Root had started a day or so earlier for a load of household goods, and on his way back to the settlement was attacked by a band of ruffians, who swore they would hang the d—d abolitionist, and suiting their action to the word, they dragged him into the woods, where the rope was thrown around the limb of a tree and the noose adjusted to his neck. He begged for a few moments to pray for his family up in the territory, which the leaders of the ruffianly gang would not grant, until one of the crowd, smitten by his conscience, stepped forward and said, "I have a family, too, and protest against this proceeding." Mr. Root was liberated and permitted to go on, but not until all his baggage had been ransacked by the villains, and everything worth appropriating was appropriated. The mill reached the settlement in safety, and was set up and in motion with all the speed possible, and its powers were sorely taxed to supply the demand for lumber.

Up to this time, all that had been done by way of surveying the county had been done by the government in dividing it into congressional townships of six miles square. Before claims could be taken so that each man could tell his own with any degree of certainty, it was necessary to have the townships surveyed and marked off into sections. This having been done, claims were staked off for those who had determined to remain, after which a committee of appraisement was appointed to set a value upon each claim. The value of the best claim was set at $120, the second best at $80, and so they ran, on a descending scale, until $5 was reached. Quite a number were valued at par, which was found by striking an average of the whole. This having been done, the claims were then offered for sale at auction, those offering the highest bonus over the appraised value getting the choice claims. The money derived from these bonuses was distributed among those who had taken claims below par, and thereby equality of distribution was secured as nearly as it was possible so to do. Each having secured his claim, a town company was then organized by the colonists, into which were taken as many of the older settlers as desired to join. A beautiful site was selected on the south side of the Kansas River, which was surveyed and laid off into streets and lots, to which was given the name of Wabaunsee, and by which the village is still known. Thus the plans and purposes of the colonists on leaving Connecticut were carried out, and the Beecher Rifle Company became established as among the earliest settlers of Wabaunsee County.

While this settlement was being made in the northern portion of the county, we find that during the same year settlers were commencing to locate further south; as, for instance, in Mill Creek Township we find that Henry Schmidt, Wm. Drebing, B. Cline, J. Metzger, Joseph Treu and one or two others, made settlement there in 1856. In 1857 the Wabaunsee settlement was reinforced by the arrival of five young volunteers from Mendon, Illinois, who had volunteered to go to Kansas. The citizens of Mendon furnished them with arms and accoutrements, and they started together to render what assistance they could in adding Kansas to the list of Free States. Finding it impossible to go through Missouri, they struck across Iowa, taking for an objective point Tabor, in Fremont County, which at that time was the rendezvous for Redpath and his men. When they arrived there they found that Redpath had already preceded them, and that at that time he had in his command about 150 men, well armed with Sharp's rifles, and for artillery he had one brass field-piece. They crossed over into Nebraska with Redpath's men and went with them south until within one day's march of Topeka, where the command was halted. The Mendon volunteers, at this point, started off as an independent company by themselves, and arrived on the second day thereafter. These young men were named Enoch Platt, J. E. Platt, L. H. Platt, S. R. Weed and S. H. Fairfield.

The northeast portion—or about one-fourth—of the county was not open to settlement until 1869, it being embraced within the Pottawatomie reservation. About this time a few settlers had also located in Alma Township, among whom were Henry and J. Terras, G. Zwanziger, Fred Polenski, Edward Krupp, and some others. Irrespective of Indians, as near as can be ascertained, there were, at the close of 1857, about 400 settlers in the county.

The following is a list of the names of those of the "Beecher Rifle Company," or "New Haven Colony," who came to Wabaunsee and remained over three months. Twenty of the original ninety who started from New Haven never came to Kansas at all, and all the others whose names are not given, either not wishing to share the fatigues, hardships and difficulties of the colony, or from some other cause, left the colony shortly after its arrival and the names that are given represent only those who remained with the colony during its early struggles. They are as follows: C. B. Lines, Wm. Hartley, Jr., J. D. Farren, Geo. H. Coe, F. H. Hart, Silas M. Thomas, L. H. Root, J. M. Hubbard Jr., Wm. Mitchell Jr., O. Bardwell, Rollin Moses, A. A. Cotteral, H. S. Hall, Benj. Street, J. J. Walter, T. C. P. Hyde, E. C. D. Lines, E. D. Street, Timothy Read, H. M. Selden, George Wells, S. A. Baldwin, W. S. Griswold, Isaac Fenn, J. P. Root, J. F. Willard, H. D. Rice, H. Isbell, D. F. Scranton, E. J. Lines, F. W. Ingham, L. A. Parker, E. N. Penfield, R. W. Griswold, G. H. Thomas, M. C. Welch, B. C. Porter, F. Johnson, C. E. Pond, L. W. Clark and W. G. McNary.

BORDER INDIAN TROUBLES.

In territorial days the people had a law among themselves, and one which was generally observed, known as the "squatter" law. It was a kind of protective society, the governing principle being a sort of offensive and defensive arrangement by which each protected the other in his claim to the land upon which they squatted. In 1855 one J. H. Nesbitt had taken a claim in the vicinity of what is now the town of Wabaunsee, but he had allowed two years to roll by without putting up any buildings, or making any improvements. Under this local law things moved along very smoothly until one night towards the latter end of the summer of 1857, a man came along from Missouri and jumped the claim. Assisted by a few Missourians who had previously settled in the neighborhood, that night he erected what is known as a "shake," and entered upon possession. Next morning the news soon spread that Nesbitt's claim was jumped, and this was the signal for a general muster. That day a party waited upon the Missourian and notified him to leave, but he very politely told them to go to h—l, at the same time giving them to understand he would shoot the first man that undertook to disturb him.

A few nights after his "shake" was surrounded by a prairie fire, but he had taken the precaution to place a fire-break around it, and thus saved it. About two weeks subsequent to this time, a party of men surrounded the "shake" one night, and commenced the assault by hammering in the door. The Missourian thought it was about time to leave, but just as he was making his exit, a blanket was thrown over his head and he was carried to the river. Here he was fastened to a log and pushed out into the stream. At this juncture he begged so piteously for mercy, and promised so strongly that he would surrender the claim and leave, that they pulled him ashore, untied him, and after having escorted him about three miles from the settlement, told him to go and never return, and that was the last seen of him in the neighborhood.

That system of railroading known before the war, or previous to 1861, as "underground," was very successfully conducted in Wabaunsee County. There were two stations in the county, one at Mission Creek and one at Wabaunsee, which were about thirty miles apart. All the passengers transported over an "underground" railroad were escaped slaves seeking freedom. Passengers arriving at the Mission Creek station would receive safe conduct from there to Wabaunsee. Nearly all the travel was done by night. Arriving at Wabaunsee, the passengers would there be taken in charge by other conductors, who would take them to the next station, which was sixty miles distant in the direction of Tabor, in Fremont County, Iowa, which was the point of delivery. As many as eighteen have been conducted through on one trip. At one time a slave named Charley had found his way from Missouri to Wabaunsee station, and was taken in charge by the conductors, but his master having pursued him, he was found and his surrender demanded. The settlers were not the kind of men to answer such a demand but in one way, and arming themselves with their Beecher rifles,* they brought Charley out and told the master and his men if they wanted him to come and take him. They did not come for him, and Charley received safe conduct toward the land of freedom, but over a different route from the one usually followed.

The lands of the Pottawatomie reservation lay on both sides of the Kansas River, part in Pottawatomie County and part in Wabaunsee County. On the Wabaunsee side of the river there were about 2,000 Pottawatomie Indians. In Nebraska the Pawnee tribe was located. It was customary with this tribe to make periodical predatory incursions into the land of the Pottawatomies, and carry off all the ponies, cattle, and other plunder they could get their hands on; nor were they any way backward about taking as many scalps of the Pottawatomies as they could conveniently reach. On one of these plundering expeditions the Pawnees had crossed the river, and had penetrated the Pottawatomie territory nearly as far as the present Newbury, where they were set upon by the Pottawatomies, and in the conflict that followed the Pawnees were defeated and driven across the river after losing a number of their warriors, whose scalps afterwards graced the belts of the Pottawatomies. This was the end of Pawnee predatory incursions. Nothing was known of this fight by the whites until the following day, when a party from the Wabaunsee settlement, on its way to Leavenworth for provisions, camped near Newbury, and on going to a spring near by for water, came upon the remains of a dead Pawnee, whose ears and nose had been cut off, his tongue and heart cut out, and otherwise terribly mutilated.

In 1854 D. B. Hyatt, in company with a young comrade, left their homes in Illinois with the intention of settling in Kansas. Arriving at the Missouri River, they took the boat for Leavenworth. While on the boat they made the acquaintance of a young man from Missouri, who said that he was going out to look for a location in Kansas, too. The three left the boat together at Leavenworth, and procuring ponies, started westward. Hyatt's comrade had about $800 in gold in a belt, which he wore round his body. They traveled together, enjoying each other's company, until a place named Likens was reached, a short distance west from Topeka. Here they consulted as to the best course to pursue, when the Missourian proposed that Hyatt should remain where they were to take charge of the extra ponies, while he and Hyatt's comrade would push on through Wabaunsee County and see what advantages it offered for settlement. This proposition was agreed to, and next day carried into effect. Day after day passed by, and Hyatt was becoming quite anxious about his absent comrades. What had become of them? Had anything serious happened to them? Had they been killed by Indians?—were questions which he could not answer, and his increasing anxiety gave rise to doubt, and doubt created fear, and fear was succeeded by determination. He would go in search of his comrades, and know the worst. Engaging a few Indians to accompany him, he started across the country, but they had not gone far when they were met by the saddleless and riderless pony which had been ridden by his young friend from Illinois. Doubt now became certainty, and following the trail they came to a creek in the northwest of Wabaunsee County, where they found the ashes of the saddle and the charred remains of the young man from Illinois who had started with Mr. Hyatt to make himself a new home in Kansas, but instead of which he found a grave, having been foully murdered by the Missourian, and this was the first case of murder committed by a white man upon another in the county. The murderer was tracked, pursued, captured, and received that punishment, without the aid of court or jury, which he so justly merited. The creek by which the remains were found was afterwards known and designated by the Indians as Dead-man's Creek, but subsequently it was given the name of Emmons Creek, by which it now appears on the map.

The outbreak of the Kiowa tribe of Indians took place in the fall of 1860, and having succeeded in getting several bands of the Cheyennes and Camanches to join them, they commenced operations by attacking emigrant trains and the white settlers on the frontiers. Their movements were made chiefly along the old Santa Fe trail. Train after train was attacked and plundered, regardless of whether it was composed of emigrant or government wagons. They succeeded in carrying their depredations as far east as Marion County, which is in the second tier of counties south and west from Wabaunsee. The whole country for miles around was filled with dread and consternation. The desire to plunder reached the prairie band of Pottawatomies, at that time located in Wabaunsee County, and this desire was fanned into war-heat by a few emissaries from the Kiowas, who induced them to join in the plundering foray. The Pottawatomies assembled their warriors, about two hundred strong, and made preparations to march and join forces with the Kiowas, Cheyennes and Camanches. This becoming known to the white settlers adjoining the reservation, word was immediately sent throughout the county warning the people of the threatened Indian outbreak, and cautioning them to keep themselves in readiness, and for as many as possibly could be spared from the different localities to hasten with all possible speed to Alma. The women and children in the vicinity of Alma sought shelter in the corn-fields, while the men, though few in number, took to their rifles, determined, at all hazards, to prevent the junction of the Pottawatomies with the Kiowas, Cheyennes and Camanches, as there was no telling what might happen if this combination was effected.

No sooner had news of the impending danger gone abroad than settlers from a distance commenced to come in to the designated place of rendezvous from nearly every direction. Some came alone, while others came in groups of two, three, four, and upwards, but every man came prepared to fight if necessary. Not dreaming of meeting with any interruption, out marched the Pottawatomies in full war dress and paint, and south to join the depredating Kiowas, Cheyennes and Camanches. They crossed Mill Creek at or near a point where Pauly's mill now stands. A little beyond the creek, close to Polenski's farm, they were brought to a halt by the assembled whites, by whom they were told they could go no further, and that they had better return to their reservation. The Indians largely outnumbered the whites, and were inclined to parley, but the whites were determined, told them they were their friends and did not want to harm them, but if they persisted in going any further they would fight. While this parley was being held, and while the Indians were counselling as to what they should do, armed men continued to arrive from more distant parts of the county. The Indians saw that to insist upon advancing further would be useless, and very wisely concluded to return to their reservation, which they did, and thus a collision was avoided, and the junction of the Pottawatomies with the other plundering tribes was prevented.

The "Beecher Rifle Company," which is sometimes described as the "New Haven Colony," and also as the "Connecticut Kansas Colony," arrived in Wabaunsee County in April, 1856, during the border ruffian troubles. In the following month, May, a messenger arrived at the colony from Lawrence, and informed the settlers of the danger that threatened the Free-State men in that vicinity from an anticipated attack from the Proslavery men from Missouri and some other Southern States. The Beecher Company had not got properly quartered yet, and were busy in their preparations for settlement, when the messenger from Lawrence arrived and beseeched their aid. Under these circumstances a council of the company was held to take into consideration what they had better do in the premises. They desired to go to the help of their beleaguered friends in Lawrence, but their own affairs were such that they could not leave them without incurring great risk and entailing vast trouble and inconvenience. It was finally determined to send a committee of two to investigate affairs at Lawrence, upon whose report the colony would act.

Mr. Mitchell and Dr. L. Root were selected as the committee, and started immediately for Lawrence. They reached Topeka the same night, and next morning hired two mules, intending to push on to their point of destination as fast as possible; but having been told that the ruffians were patroling all the roads leading into Lawrence, they stopped at Tecumseh until darkness set in, when, evading the patrols, they succeeded in reaching Lawrence in safety. Having ascertained the true position of affairs, and seeing the danger by which the Free-State men were threatened, the night following their arrival they mounted their mules, and, in company with two others well mounted, started from Lawrence to return to the colony and report. A little way from town they came upon a log house, through the chinks of which light was visible, and from which, as they were passing, some ten or fifteen muskets were discharged at them in a volley. The night was rather dark, and the two horses on which their companions were mounted, either through fright or urged by the spur, set off at full gallop, and that was the last seen of them. Without taking time to re-load, the party stationed in the log house, after firing the volley, rushed out and surrounded Mr. Mitchell and his comrade, Dr. Root, and commanded them to dismount and surrender. To this they demurred for some time, but they were told if they were found to be "all right" they would be allowed to proceed in the morning. The doctor and Mr. Mitchell held a short consultation, in which the doctor advised submission as the surest and quickest way of getting word back to the colony, arguing that as they were but a few weeks, and the colony about seventy miles from Lawrence, nobody would know them, and, as a consequence, when morning came they would be allowed to go on their journey unmolested. Their mules and revolvers were taken from them under protest, the captain of the ruffians telling them they could have them in the morning. They were then escorted to a little hut that was used as a "guard-house," into which they were put, and where they found that several other prisoners had preceded them.

*Furnished the company by Rev. H. W. Beecher before leaving New Haven for Kansas.

Next morning they were conducted separately before the captain and examined, and for no other reason than that they were Free-State men, they were remanded to the guard-house, where they were kept for several days. Mr. Mitchell, by his abrupt and defiant answers, had incurred the displeasure of the captain, and a day or two after a man was sent to search him for supposed concealed correspondence. Mr. Mitchell was lying on the floor, and told the ruffian to search away, that he would not get up to yield to such an outrage, and wanted to know why he was singled out for such purpose. The ruffian told him that he was suspected of having concealed in his boots letters from the Free-State men in Lawrence to others in Topeka and Wabaunsee. "Pull off my boots and see," said Mr. Mitchell, and the ruffian pulled the boots off, but found no correspondence. Mr. Mitchell was no way guarded in his language during the performance, every word of which was reported to the captain. The culprit was sent for, and for his misbehavior was detailed as cook for the rest of the prisoners, who now numbered eighteen. He flatly refused to cook, when again he was taken before the captain, followed by a crowd of drunken ruffians, to whom was given all the whisky they could drink, free of charge. While the captain and Mr. Mitchell were bandying words, some of the ruffians cried out, "Hang the abolitionist!" and, as if all had been pre-arranged, a rope was instantly thrown around his neck and the noose drawn; but some of the ruffians, more sober than the rest, interfered and saved him from being hung. All this time the colony was anxiously awaiting the return of its committee, and hearing no tidings of them or from them, one of the settlers of Wabaunsee took it upon himself to go and, if possible, ascertain what had happened to them; but he also was captured and placed in the guard-house, where they were kept for over two weeks, and until after the sacking of Lawrence by the ruffians, when they were liberated, and returned to the colony in Wabaunsee. Without meeting with any further delays or accidents, more than was rendered necessary by both having to ride the same mule in turn, one having been lost or confiscated during their stay in the guard-house. Mr. Mitchell and Dr. Root returned in safety to the colony, where they told the story of their arrest, confinement and treatment.

Steps were immediately taken to organize a military company, composed of the colonists and surrounding settlers, which in a short time was perfected. The company was armed with Sharp's rifles, being the same that were furnished, half by the people of New Haven and half by Rev. H. W. Beecher, numbered between fifty and sixty men, and took for its name that of "Prairie Guards." Mr. Mitchell was chosen captain of the company, and scarcely was its formation completed when, in response to a call of the "Committee of Safety," it marched to Lawrence to aid in defending that city against the band of ruffians who had swarmed from Missouri and other Slave States and threatened it with destruction. To this conflict between the settlers of the Free States and those from the Slave States has been given the name of the "Wakarusa War," at the close of which the Prairie Guards, without meeting with any casualties, returned to their homes in Wabaunsee County.

Another incident that gave rise to a good deal of excitement at the time, was the murder of Mr. Waterman, who was the first postmaster in Maple Hill Township. The murdered man, Waterman, owned and ran a saw-mill at a point on Mill Creek, near where the government grist-mill once stood. White and Frego, the party who did the killing, had been in his employ, and had quarreled over some trifling matter in settlement. White was a white man and Frego a half-breed Indian. One day Waterman, with one of his hired men, was returning from Topeka and had reached Mission Creek, where he stopped in the stream to allow his horses to drink. White and Frego were lying in wait for him, concealed in the timber along the bank of the stream. As the horses were in the act of drinking, crack, crack, went two rifles, fired by these men in ambush. Waterman was instantly killed, and the hired man badly wounded. The news of the killing soon spread, and instantly a hue and cry went forth against the murderers. The country was scoured in every direction for several days, but the assassins succeeded in eluding the vigilance of their pursuers, and made their escape.

INCIDENTS OF PIONEER LIFE.

Thirty years ago, Wabaunsee County, with the greater portion of Kansas was considered part of the Great American Desert. But few white people then ventured west of the Missouri River, intending to make settlement upon Kansas soil, and those that did so venture, came with the expectation of battling against privations, difficulties and hardships never thought of or known but to the early pioneers. In those days the Atlantic and Pacific oceans were not bound together by steel bands, nor did the iron-horse go bounding across the seeming boundless prairies of the West. Settlers came expecting hardships and fatigue, nor were they disappointed in their expectations, and those who first settled in Wabaunsee County, were no exception to the rule. Up to 1861, their fare was of the hardest kind. Leavenworth and Kansas City were their nearest trading points, and these were distant one hundred miles or more, and the usual mode of conveyance was by ox-team. Their manner of trading was for the people in an entire neighborhood whose means enabled them so to do, to club together and purchase their goods by the wagon load, and the poorer settlers whose means, if they had any, were very much limited, were obliged to get along as best they could. It usually required from ten days to two weeks for an ox-team to make the trip to Kansas City and back, and its return would be as anxiously looked for as a shipwrecked mariner tries to descry land. In 1855, some of the settlers succeeded in raising a little sod corn, but how to prepare it for food was a troublesome question. The nearest mill was fifty miles away, and the quantity of corn raised was so small that it would not pay for the hauling and milling. Their manner of preparing it was to dry it on a sheet and then break it up between two rocks or in an improvised mortar and then make it into hominy. Tea was a luxury that very few, if any, enjoyed, and burnt corn or corn bread was very often substituted for coffee, while chickory was relished as a delicious beverage. When they began to raise a little wheat they supplied their necessities for flour by grinding it in coffee mills, and thus they fought and struggled on from year to year until garden patches began to furnish them with vegetables and wider wheat and corn fields afforded crops sufficiently abundant to enable them to go to mill. To add to their other discomforts every year would see about eight out of every ten of the settlers shaking with the ague which was caused by the use of creek water. This was attributed to climatic causes, nor was the true cause discovered until the people began to dig wells and get pure water, after which all signs of ague disappeared. Nature, however, was kind to them and stocked the streams with an abundance of fish and the prairies with plenty of buffalo, antelope, elk and deer, while of wild turkeys and prairie chickens there was an amplitude. Fencing was about the most difficult task the settlers had. They did not expect to fence in large farms in the earlier days of the settlement, but yet efforts were made to fence in patches of land running from five to twenty acres. Most of the posts and rails had to be made from cottonwood trees, the snarly nature of which rendered it almost impossible for a man during a hard day's work to cut and split more than fifteen or twenty rails. Nor was this the worst they had to contend against, for after having their fences built they ran great risk of having them destroyed by prairie fire, and not only their fences but all their worldly possessions. Then there was no roads to stop the progress of a prairie fire when once it got started, and it would sweep across the prairie, licking up the tall, rank grass on its way, with a roar like that of mighty ocean when under the power of a raging tempest.

This fighting prairie fire was a very arduous duty imposed upon the settlers, and there was no telling when it might come. It would frequently be set on fire by Indians while out hunting, and three times it entered the settlement and did considerable damage. Notwithstanding all the backsets and disadvantages under which they labored, 1860 found the settlers in such condition as to be able to get along with some degree of comfort. This was a terrible year, however, for Kansas, for it was then visited by the severest drouth that has ever been experienced in the State. So severe was it in character, and the heat of the siroccos so intense, that the streams were dried up, cattle died by the hundred, buffalo, elk, and deer perished by droves, and the entire State was so scorched and parched, that not a sign of vegetation could be seen upon its surface. This was a very disheartening blow to the settlers of Wabaunsee County, who had already undergone so much, but they met it bravely and triumphed over all difficulties, and are now enjoying in peaceful homes, surrounded with plenty and prosperity, the reward of their industry, courage and perseverance.

But one single lady accompanied the Beecher Rifle Company from New Haven to Wabaunsee, and she acted as cook, washerwoman, and maid of all work for the Company. She took up her quarters across Antelope Creek on the opposite side to that where the majority of the Company were quartered. The means of communication between the two sides, was by a tree placed across the creek and running from bank to bank. In ordinary times the creek could be forded without much difficulty, but when the water was high the log became very convenient. It happened on one occasion that the water was pretty high, and Miss Alford was sorely troubled as to how to get the washing across to the men. This was on Saturday, and she was extremely desirous that the men should have clean "hickory's," (in those early days all the men in Wabaunsee wore hickory shirts, in which to attend church on Sunday), but how to get across the creek perplexed her sorely. She battled with the problem a long time, until shades of evening began to come down, and if the washing was to be delivered at all it would have to be done quickly, or darkness would render it impossible, and her New England religious training precluded every thought of delivering the clothes on Sunday. She tied the washing firmly together, and then fastened it on top of her head, and thus prepared, undertook to "coon" the log, that is, cross it on hands and knees, or all fours. When about the center of the log and just over where the water was deepest, there was heard a scream and a splash, and the next moment she was neck deep in water, holding on to the log to steady herself against the current. On hearing the scream, some of the men ran towards the creek to ascertain what was the matter, but by the time they got there Miss Alford was safe on terra firma, and though soaked from neck to feet herself, the bundle on her head was perfectly dry; and yet after all her fidelity and devotion, not one of the whole Company had the manly courage to propose to her. After vainly waiting for a year or so, she returned to New England, where her many virtues would likely be met with such warmth of appreciation as to dispense with all "cooning" of logs in future.

An amusing incident is told of the early courts. It was during Territorial days, and it was the first court held in Wabaunsee County. The presiding judge was Judge Elmore. While court was in session, a man from the neighborhood of Harveyville came stalking into the room in true Western style, with his pants stuffed in his bootlegs, a corn-cob pipe in his mouth, and a great white hat on his head, the rim of which flopped down like the dead ears of a mule. Throwing himself into a seat he stretched his legs out at full length, folded his arms, and assumed an attitude something like that given to Napoleon in some of his pictures. To say that the judge was horrified would not express it. He looked at the disrespecter of judicial dignity for a moment or two, but observing that his fierce scowl was disregarded, he cried out in stentorian tones, "Take off your hat, sir." The countryman straightened himself up a little and glanced around the room, then turned towards the judge and said, "Me, sir." "Yes, you, sir," said the judge, adding, "this is a land of law and order and both shall be respected." "All right, sir," said the rustic, standing up and taking off his hat, and looking around the room and seeing no place where he could hang it, he turned again to the judge and asked, "Where will I put it?" The audience could not restrain themselves, but broke out into roars of laughter. "Sheriff," said the judge, "take that man into custody," and the order was instantly obeyed. The man was well thought of by his neighbors, and during the noon adjournment they interceded for him with the judge, and pleaded that he might let him go unpunished. Now, if the judge was partial to anything in the world, it was to a nice, ripe watermelon, and on re-opening court the judge had the culprit brought in. He gave him a sound lecture, and told him if it had not been for the intercession of his neighbors he should have meted him out the full penalty of the law, but now he was disposed to be lenient, and he should sentence him to furnish watermelons for the crowd as quickly as possible. The man went off highly delighted, and in a short time a wagon-load of watermelons was drawn up in front of the court house, and the biggest one in the pile was carried up and laid upon the judge's stand. Then they commenced to roll in over the floor by the dozen, when the judge ordered court to be adjourned to the following morning, and that afternoon a melon-feast was held in the court room.

It was late in the fall of 1860, when a party started from Wabaunsee to go buffalo hunting, in order to lay in a supply of meat. The hunting ground was about forty miles west from Salina, or nearly one hundred miles from the starting point. It was Saturday evening when they pitched their camp on the edge of the hunting ground. Next day being Sunday, the question was debated whether they should hunt on that day or not. Some favored hunting, but more opposed it, and it was decided not to hunt. However, a man of the party named Williams, a little more skeptical than the rest, concluded he would hunt anyhow, and started out. He had gone but a short way when he shot a buffalo and dropped it. Thinking the beast was dead, he went up to dissect it, but he had not quite reached the spot, when up rose the buffalo and made for him furiously. He now began to realize that there was not quite so much fun in being hunted by the elephant as in hunting him. He ran and he shouted, and the faster he ran the faster the buffalo ran, and was rapidly gaining on him. To hasten his speed he threw away his rifle; but it was useless, on came the "King of the prairie" until his horns almost touched Williams' coat tail. At this juncture Williams turned sudddenly and took hold of the infuriated animal by the mane and got up straddle of his back. The lookers on dare not fire for fear of hitting Williams. It was a life or death struggle with him, but the brute danced, and bucked, and kicked, until it threw him off, and the next instant Williams was pitched into the air and came down full length upon the sod. Just as the buffalo was about stamping the life out of him, a crack from a rifle was heard, and his majesty dropped; but Williams was saved. The horns of the animal did not enter his body, but he was stripped of his clothes, even to his under-garment. He came back to camp pale as death, and said that it all occurred from his disregarding the Sabbath, and made solemn promises to never do anything on Sunday again.

An incident is told of love and jealousy among the pioneers. In 1857, a very estimable young lady, named Miss S., who found her way from New England to Wabaunsee, where an uncle of hers had preceded her. She was a bright, well-educated lady, and to the eyes of the young men in Wabaunsee, seemed as fair as the Jersey Lily. That some of them lost their balance on her account was no fault of hers. She was modest and well behaved, and had been raised under the strictest New England training. The first who was smitten by her charms was a young doctor, who soon began to flutter around her like a knat round a candle. He was stricken by a disease that all the compounds and nostrums known to the science of medicine could not cure. He seemed to be prospering well in courtship, but just about this time a second suitor came along who thought he had as good right to try win the affections of the girl as the compounder of pills. The young lady was civil to both suitors, and sometimes would be seen strolling along the banks of the river with one and sometimes with the other. The second suitor was the owner of a cow, and while the courtship was going on this cow gave birth to a calf. Here was his opportunity to get ahead of the doctor. Those little attentions generally paid to girls, by way of presents, was out of the question in Wabaunsee, and the idea entered the head of number two, that he would show his devotion to his lady-love by presenting her with this calf, which, he concluded, would be a settler on the doctor. In due time the calf was led forth and presented, and the young lady, having an eye to business, accepted the quadruped with a very gracious smile, which greatly pleased the donor, and he thinking he had laid out the doctor by this little strategem, went away delighted. While all this was going on, there was a third gentleman who had been taking observations of how things were moving, and about this time he made his appearance upon the scene and carried away the prize. In a short time they were married in due form, and having previously had a home all prepared for the reception of his bride, thither they repaired after the marriage ceremony was over, with a number of their friends, where they found the wedding supper already prepared to which the company sat down. This over, the guests in due time departed, and the newly married couple were left to enjoy the commencement of their honeymoon. Suitor number two, had taken his discomfiture quite philosophically, and consoled himself by the old adage about as good fish being in the sea, etc.; but the doctor's mind took a very different turn. The green-eyed monster had taken possession of him, and that night when the settlement was all still and quiet, he stole forth and applied the torch to the house of the new-made bride and groom. Soon the house was in flames, and instantly the cry of "Fire" ringing through the settlement disturbed the newly-married couple in their dreams of future pleasure and happiness, and rushing from the house, they left the bridal couch to become food for the flames. In the morning the doctor was missing, and never after returned to the settlement.

First Suit in Justice's Court.—The first lawsuit tried in the county was tried before F. H. Hebrank, a Justice of the Peace in and for Alma Township. The case was brought to recover damages, and the following is a copy of the docket entries:

PETER THOES, Plaintiff, vs.
EDWARD KRAPP, Defendant. } ss.

This 26th day of June, Peter Thoes sued Edward Krapp for trespass, by carrying off gravel off his lands without his consent, and treble damages for the sum of $73.12½ cents and costs of suit. [Here follows a list of the witnesses.]

Alma Township, Wabaunsee County, the 7th day of July, A. D. 1860. The above named persons are present, but Peter Thoes demanded a jury, therefore, I adjourned the cause from the 7th to the 10th of July. On the 10th day of July, the case was heard, and the following testimony was introduced: Peter Thoes, plaintiff, said, under oath, that he had not seen that Ed. Krapp has taken the gravel, but that he (Ed. Krapp) offered him $2 for it.

Joseph Thoes testified that he went to the place where the gravel has been taken, and that he found, to his judgment, about two hundred bushels of it gone; he saw the wagon tracks going out into the road toward the house of defendant. The testimony of Joseph Weiss likewise, of Fred Steinmayer, also.

The testimony of Elis Metzgar and Peter Metzgar is unimportant.

The jurors went back and returned in a short time; they agreed in the verdict and are discharged.

Verdict:

We, the jury, do find the complaint of the plaintiff, as set forth in his bill of particulars, true, and do assess his damages in the premises at nine dollars.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION AND COUNTY-SEAT TROUBLES.

In 1855, the Territorial Legislature, the same that enacted the laws which have passed into history as the "Bogus Statutes," divided that portion of what is now the State of Kansas, commencing at the north line of the State at the northwest corner of Marshall County, and running south to the northwest corner of Davis County, thence west to the northwest corner of Saline County, thence south to what was then the north line of the Osage Reservation, which was fifty-four miles north of the south line of the State, and all east of said north and south line, into counties. The territory thus described embraced what is now known as Wabaunsee County. As originally established, "Richardson" was the name given to the county, in honor of Governor Richardson, of Illinois; but subsequently, in 1859, the name was changed to Wabaunsee. The county was made one municipal township, and was attached to Shawnee County for judicial and revenue purposes. In 1859, there being the necessary population requisite to organize a county, a petition was signed by the inhabitants and presented to the Governor of the Territory, praying that the county be organized into a separate and distinct corporation for all purposes corporate, revenue and judicial. The prayer was granted, and to perfect the organization an election was held on the —— day of March, 1859, for the election of county officers. There were two voting precincts in the county—one at Alma, and one at the village of Wabaunsee. The whole number of votes polled was 111, which resulted in the election of the following-named officers: County Commissioners—Henry Harvey, J. M. Hubbard, G. Zwanziger; Probate Judge—J. M. Hubbard; Clerk of the Court—J. M. Harvey, Sheriff—John Hodgson; Register of Deeds—Moses C. Welch; County Attorney—R. G. Terry; Coroner—August Brasche; Treasurer—Henry Harvey; Surveyor—G. Zwanziger; Auditor—S. F. Ross; Superintendent of Public Instruction—J. E. Platt.

After the organization of the county was completed, the commissioners divided it into four townships, named repectively, Alma, Wabaunsee, Mission Creek and Wilmington. Alma embraced the territory now comprised in the townships of Alma, Washington, Farmer and Mill Creek. Wabaunsee embraced the present township of that name, and what was afterwards Zeandale Township, but which was subsequently, by act of the Territorial Legislature, set off and annexed to Riley County. Mission Creek Township embraced its present territory, and Wilmington was composed of what is now Wilmington and Rock Creek Townships. The territory that now constitutes the townships of Kaw, Newbury and Maple Hill then formed a portion of the Pottawatomie reserve lands, and was not open to white settlement. In 1869, the Pottawatomie reserve lands were opened to settlement, and in 1870, all the territory embraced therein which was located in Wabaunsee County was made into a township, to which was given the name of Newbury. In September, 1872, a new township was created and named Maple Hill, the eastern portion of Newbury Township being set off for this purpose. Again, in July, 1875, Newbury underwent another division, by which what is now known as Kaw Township was taken from its northern territory, thereby bringing Newbury Township to its present limits. In September, 1873, the townships of Washington and Farmer were created from territory originally included in Alma Township; and still earlier by one year, in October, 1872, Alma was reduced in size by taking from it the territory necessary to create Mill Creek Township. In October, 1872, Rock Creek Township was formed, the territory necessary therefor having been taken from the west half of Wilmington Township. By these geographical divisions that took place from time to time as the population increased, the county has been divided into eleven townships, which, though not altogether equal in extent of area, are very fairly proportioned.

Following is the list of the present county officers: Commissioners—F. L. Raymond, B. H. Younker, George Mogge; Probate Judge—John T. Keagy; County Attorney—G. G Cornell; Clerk of District Court—H. G. Licht; County Clerk—D M. Gardner; Treasurer—Charles Ross; Register of Deeds—S. H. Fairfield; Sheriff—H. J. Pippert; Superintendent of Public Instruction—Matt Thomson; Coroner—E. W. Eldridge; Surveyor—W. T. Mahan.

As in many other counties, the county-seat question has been a bone of considerable contention in Wabaunsee County. In 1859, when the county was first organized, the seat of justice was established at Wabaunsee, this being the only place in the county at that time bearing any resemblance to a village, and for the further reason that Wabaunsee Township was then by far the most thickly populated township in the county. Its location, however, was far from being central, Wabaunsee being situated in the northwest corner of the county. Owing to this fact, and from the belief that, when the county became more settled, efforts would be made to change it to a more central location, no permanent county buildings were erected, and the official business of the county was transacted in temporary buildings improvised for the occasion. Subsequent events proved that the belief as to change of location was well founded, for in a few years after the question of changing the location of the county-seat began to be agitated, and in 1866 the matter was submitted to the people by the commissioners. The contest was between Wabaunsee and Alma, and the election took place on the 22d day of November, 1866. The fight was hotly contested on both sides, but when the ballots were counted, Alma came off victor by twenty-eight votes out of a total of 258. This was a hard blow to Wabaunsee, but the fiat of the people had gone forth, and towards the latter end of December, of the same year, all the records of the county, with the county officers, were loaded on two wagons and conveyed to Alma, where a small frame building, about fourteen feet square, had been built to receive them. At that time not as much as a single dwelling-house had been erected on the town site of Alma. The following spring, the frame building now occupied by Fred Crafts as a drug store was erected for county purposes, which, when completed, was taken possession of by the county officers, and into which the records were moved. Alma had now the county-seat, but still she was not happy. The fear of losing it, which had so haunted the people of Wabaunsee, soon began to take possession of the Almaites, and the questions that bothered them were: How long will it remain? Can we hold it? The uncertainty that hung about the permanent location of the county-seat, which was rendered still more uncertain by the fact that up to this time there was no railroad in the county, and no prospect of one in the near future, retarded greatly the growth of Alma. In 1870, the question of another change was agitated, and again the matter was submitted to the people, the contesting points being Alma, Newbury and Eskridge. The election was held on the 7th of February, 1871, at which 842 votes were cast, of which Alma received 369; Newbury, 217; and Eskridge, 256. There being no choice, a[illegible]ection was ordered to be held on the 21st of February, 1871. Now was the trying [illegible]lma, because at the preceding election an understanding was had between New-[illegible] Eskridge that, in case there should be no choice, whichever of those two places [illegible]d the smallest vote should drop out of the contest and unite forces with the other. Excitement ran high, and the people were appealed to by all manner of argument. Speeches were made and committees sent out to visit every voter in the county, and sound him upon the question, and if found doubtful, "fix" him if possible. Placards and handbills setting forth in glowing colors the advantages of one place over the other were posted up on every school-house and at every cross-roads. Circulars were scattered broadcast over the county setting forth that one place was destined to be a great manufacturing, and the a great commercial, emporium. All that could be said or done, either for or against the other respective localities, was faithfully performed. In one of these circulars this sentence appeared: "Alma is pledged to give the county a safe, well-built and handsome stone building, worth from six to ten thousand dollars," and compares this with the offer of Eskridge, "to give the county the use, for a stated time, of a wooden building." How necessary it was for Alma to put forth all the effort possible will be seen by the result. The 21st of February came—a day freighted with so much interest to Alma. The election was held, and Newbury, true to her compact with Eskridge at the previous election, cast a solid vote in favor of the county-seat to Eskridge. There were 894 ballots cast, of which number Alma received 465 and Eskridge 429, so that Alma carried off the prize by thirty-six votes. The people of Alma, in order to redeem the pledge they had made to the people, immediately set to work and erected a very fine stone court house at a cost of about $8,000, of which sum they raised by subscription $4,000, and the remainder was paid by the township. This building, with the four lots upon which it is located, they deeded to the county upon condition that there should be no change in the location of the county-seat for twenty-one years; so that in all probability there will be no further contests over the county-seat question for at least ten years yet to come, and possibly, never.

WAR RECORD.

At the breaking out of the war for the Union, the population of Wabaunsee County, all told, was about 1,050, the voting population numbering about 250. The settlers being nearly all from the Eastern States, and, chiefly, from New England, renders it almost unnecessary to write anything on the position of Wabaunsee in the struggle for freedom. The historian, however, in gathering material for history, must write for the future as well as the present, and must not omit to write of things, merely because the subject matter upon which he writes is well known to the people who are contemporaneous with himself. The manner in which Wabaunsee County responded to the call of the nation for men, to put down the Rebellion, constitutes one of the brightest pages in its history, and deserves to be recorded in indelible letters, so that if the occasion ever arises, when like services may be required, the noble example of her sons may be followed by those who come after them. There were probably not over two hundred men in the county, subject to military duty, at the commencement of the war of Rebellion. Of this number the following enlisted in the Union Army and went into active service in the infantry regiments:

Second Infantry, Company B.—E. C. D. Lines, A. M. Reed, A. Hankimmer, H. L. Isbell, M. C. Welch, I. C. Isbell.

Eighth Infantry, Company E.—Capt. John Greelish, Wm. Richardson, R. M. Kendall, Wm. Blankenslip, Ephraim Smith, J. P. Kendall, J. B. Bancks, G. W. Barnes, L. P. Cawkins, Charles Cooney, J. H. Dunmire, Henry Harvey, T. O. Hill, T. Ingersoll, L. D. Johnson, Henry Naegilli, Josiah Richards, Daniel Spear, John Wells, S. Bickford, Charles Burns, J. H. Cummings, Henry Grimm, A. W. Harris, Z. Johnson, J. W. Johnston, Henry Lutz, Amos Reese, A. J. Smith, S. J. Speer, John Saylor, F. M. Weaver.

The following enlisted in the cavalry service: Second Cavalry, Company A—W. C. Studibaker; Company B—James Dickson; Company F—Charles Ross, W. B. Doty, G. W. Eddy, G. F. Hartwell, A. S. Waters, S. B. Easter, Eli Watson; Company K—C. E. Bisby, Columbus Foster, A. H. Kelsey. Fifth Cavalry, Company A—Hamilton David; Company L—B. C. Benedict. Sixth Cavalry, Company F—Joseph Weisse, E. W. Wetzold. Eighth Cavalry, Company E—Haynie Thomson. Eleventh Cavalry, Company E—Benj. Cripps, Ira Hodgson, A. D. McCoy, Geo. Hodgson, I. H. Isbell, G. H. Hill, A. H. Brown, J. N. Smith, George Ross, Riley Frizzle, Albert Kees, Wm. Mahan, W. F. Isbell, W. H. Lapham, L. J. Mossman, Samuel Sage, C. G. Town, Samuel Woods; Company G—J. F. Chapman, T. S. St John, J. V. B. Thompson; Company H—D. B. Hiatt, G. R. Saunders, T. D. Rose; Company I—H. C. Thomson; Company K—Capt. J. M. Allen, Lieut. J. M. Hubbard, J. H. Pinkerton, J. B. Allen, Moritz Kranz, D. Schwanke, P. C. Pinkerton, W. A. Limbocker, Henry Grimm, S. H. Fairfield, Albert Dieball, G. D. Ensign, Isaac Fenn, Edward Hoffman, Jacob Isler, Hiram Keyes, A. T. McCormick, J. M. McCormick, John McNair, Sebast. Nehring, G. Siegrist, R. M. Widney, Wm. Wiley, R. P. Blain, R. J. Earl; Company L—Lieut. J. Van Antwerp, J. T. Green, G. B Cotton, E. A. Kelsey, Wm. Smith, John Smith; Company M—John N. Doty.

For 112 men to enlist and voluntarily go to the war out of a total of 200 subject to military duty is an example of patriotism, fully equal to the Spartan age, and which places Wabaunsee County high up on the roll of honor in the terrible four years' conflict for liberty.

STATISTICS OF GROWTH.

The growth of the county in population has not been rapid, nor is this to be wondered at, when it is borne in mind that less than one-half of the county is adapted to farming purposes, and not even this much, except in unusually rainy seasons, and that it is only a little more than a decade since one-fourth of the county has been open to settlement. Added to these is the other fact that, until the latter part of 1881, the county was without any railroad facilities whatever, and the one that traverses it now, being only a branch of the A. T. & S. Fe. running north and south, from Manhattan on the north, to Burlingame on the south, a distance of fifty-five miles, offers none of those advantages which tend to encourage immigration. Considering these circumstances, its growth has increased about as rapidly as could reasonably, be expected. The following table will show its increase in population during the last twenty year:

Year.	Population.	Increase.
1870	3,362	2,339
1875	4,649	1,287
1878	5,386	737
1880	8,757	3,371

Total increase in twenty years.........7,734

The material growth of the county has more than kept pace with the growth in population, as will be seen from the following figures:

The acreage of field crops in 1872 was	32,401
" " " " " 1881 "	83,973
Increase in nine years	51,572

It will be observed by these figures that the value of the crop for 1881 is almost as much as that of 1877-'78 combined, while if we compare the acreage, we find that in 1877 it was 46,147.25, and in 1878 it was 52,430.00, making a total for the two years of 98,577.25, or 14,604.25 more than the acreage for 1881, while the value of the product of the latter is nearly equal to that of the other two years, the difference in value representing only about $4.40 per acre of the aggregated acreage of the two years over that of 1881. This is accounted for by the fact that 1877 was a tolerably good year for crops, while the crop of 1878 was exceedingly short; but on the other hand the crop of 1881 was considered very far from an average. If we look for a cause of this great difference, we will find it in the market price of the products for the various years, so that the material growth of the county cannot be measured by the value of its products, but by the improvements made upon realty and the increased accumulations of stock and other personal property. When we come to compare the increase in farm animals, then we begin to see evidences of material prosperity. In 1874 the value of farm animals was $60,019.00, whereas in 1881 it was $149,880.00, an increase in seven years of $89,861.00. In 1874 the products of live stock were valued at $142,108.47, in 1881 at $283,405.10, an increase of $141,296.73. In 1874 the value of horticultural products was $5,463.18, in 1881, it was $17,611.36, an increase of $12,148.18. The total valuation of products of 1881 in Wabaunsee County was $1,171,064.71, being an increase from 1874 of $759,361.48. The total assessed valuation of property, March 1, 1881, was $2,109,706.86, and the real valuation was $3,516,176.45, and the total value of all property was $4,687,241.16. The value per capita of products of 1881 was $145.89, and that of assessed property was $438.04, while the per capita value of products and assessed property combined was $583.93. During the year ending March 1, 1881, there were erected in the county 104 farm dwellings, which were valued at $29,391. The number of acres sowed to wheat in 1881 was 14,862; rye, 861; spring wheat, 1,077; corn, 40,851; oats, 2,082; buckwheat, 50; Irish potatoes, 931; sweet potatoes, 58; sorghum, 202; castor beans, 18; flax, 785; hemp, 2; tobacco, 10; broom corn, 26; rice corn, 309; pearl millet, 62; millet and hungarian, 2,951; timothy, 59; prairie pasture, 7,895; clover, 90; prairie meadow grass, 10,681; making a grand total of 83,973 acres cultivated in 1881, irrespective of gardens. In 1881 there were in the county 335,784 rods of fence, or 1,093 miles. Of this 13,859 roods were of boards; 48,663 rods were rail; 72,317 rods were stone; 53,122 rods were hedge; 147,824 rods were wire, and the aggregate value of the whole was $346,618.55. As to quantity, stone occupies the second place, from which may be inferred the stony character of the soil, and it is no unusual thing to see stretches of stone fence extending for miles in length. If the position of Wabaunsee County is taken as to the rank it occupies, when compared with other counties of the State, relative to acreage of wheat, corn, and cultivated area in 1881, and also as to the number of farm animals, a better understanding may be had, not only of its material growth, but also as to the nature and character of the land, and those industries to which the county is best adapted. The rank of the county in acreage of wheat was 48; in corn, 54; in cultivated area, 56; in horses, 33; in mules and asses, 56; in milch cows, 7; in other cattle, 18; in sheep, 41, and in swine, 50. These figures show, at a glance, that the peculiar characteristics of the county are its extensive pastures and nutrititious grasses. By the returns of the assessors of the various townships furnished to the County Clerk, but not yet published, and which furnish the latest statistics as to the condition of the county, bringing them up to March 1, 1882, we find the number of acres enclosed in farms to be 200,855, and the number of acres under cultivation to be 89,000, which is an increase of 5,027 acres over the preceding year. We also find that the number of acres sowed to wheat was 13,841; to rye, 1,685; to corn, 38,361; to oats, 4,656; to Irish potatoes, 785; to sweet potatoes, 23; to sorghum, 295; to flax, 674; to millet and Hungarian, 3,060; to timothy, 49; to clover, 70; and the prairie grass under fence, 25,547. The tons of tame hay cut during the same year were 1,565; prairie hay, 44,542. The value of garden products marketed was $3,646; value of poultry and eggs sold during the year was $9,769; and the pounds of cheese manufactured in factories and families were 236,488. The number of horses in the county, according to the same returns, was 5,535; mules and asses, 361; milch cows, 8,808; other cattle, 18,009; sheep, 5,987; and swine, 9,078. The value of animals slaughtered and sold for slaughter was $248,018, and the amount of wool clipped was 17,516 pounds. The number of apple trees in bearing was 22,981, and the number not in bearing, 60,825; number of pear trees in bearing, 848, and not in bearing, 1,551; peach trees in bearing, 50,747; not in bearing, 32,282; plum trees in bearing, 653, not in bearing, 958; cherry trees in bearing, 7,607, and not in bearing, 8,519. When all the circumstances connected with the history of the county are considered, it cannot but be admitted that the material prosperity of the county has been all, and more than all, than could have been reasonably expected.

Wabaunsee will never be a very populous county, for the reason that fully seventy-five per cent. of the soil is much better adapted to stock-raising purposes than to agriculture. The higher uplands of the county being unfit for farming, settlers will not locate thereon, consequently settlement will be limited to the bottom lands along the streams, the lower level lands, and the towns. On some slopes, good wheat can be raised in ordinary seasons, but unless there is an abundance of rain, corn cannot be planted and cultivated with any degree of hope of securing a crop, and this will have a tendency to limit settlers to the localities above mentioned. Manufacturing can never be carried on to any extent in the county, if at all, because its water privileges are not of a character to warrant their establishment, and the scarcity of timber and absence of coal would render steam power too expensive, and in addition to these there is no natural material to manufacture. The natural adaptability of the county is for stock-raising; agriculture, horticulture, and arboriculture might be pursued advantageously and profitably. Trees of all kinds grow very rapidly, and, if properly cared for, Wabaunsee County might be made a forest. For the purposes to which nature has adapted it, agriculture and stock-raising, but few, if any, surpass it. cattle ranges, embracing miles in extent, and covered with rich, nutritious grasses, abound in the county, capable of supporting as many herds as can conveniently find room to roam over them. Besides this, there is an abundance of pure, clear water, so that stock-raising can be successfully carried on with very little trouble, and at comparatively small expense. It presents a grand field for dairying and cheese-making, and with better facilities for reaching the leading markets, there is no reason why these industries should not be extensively pursued. The future may, and doubtless will, open up various branches of industry, of an agricultural nature, which present circumstances will not admit of, but though the people of the county may be rich in flocks and herds, and their granaries be constantly filled to repletion with the choicest products of the soil, and though that contentment which is the offspring of smiling plenty may surround every hearthstone, yet nature has so formed Wabaunsee that it never will become a thickly populated county.

Up to 1880, there was not a foot of railway within the borders of the county. Completely hemmed in by railroads, but yet without the benefit of any, was the condition of Wabaunsee County until 1880. During this year the A. T. & S. Fe Railway Company built a branch road from Manhattan on the K. P. R. R., to a point on its main line named Burlingame, a distance of fifty-five miles. This branch runs through the county, from the northwest to the southeast, and for this poor privilege the people of the county voted the company $140,000. Indications, however, point to the early completion of an east and west line running westward from Leavenworth, through Topeka, and along the Mill Creek Valley, through Wabaunsee County. The line has been surveyed, the contract for its construction let, and the road is already almost completed to the east line of the county. This line once running through the county, Wabaunsee will be supplied with ample railway facilities, which will be the opening to the people of a new era of progress and prosperity.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES OF THE COUNTY.

The educational interests of the county receive great and close attention, and the people pay cheerfully, all the tax imposed upon them for their support. The growth in schools has advanced more rapidly than any other interest in the county. Prior to 1859, the year in which the county was organized, there were but four schoolhouses in the county, all of which were built by private subscription. In considering the growth of the schools, it must be borne in mind that up to 1868, one-fourth of the county was without white settlement, except by a few men who had intermarried with the Indians. There are now (1882) sixty-three schoolhouses in the county, located among the different townships as follows: Kaw Township, four schoolhouses, all frame; Wabaunsee, six, of which five are of stone and one frame; Maple Hill, five, of which four are frame and one stone; Newbury, eight, of which one is log, six frame, and one stone; Alma, one, stone; Washington, five, four stone and one frame; Farmer, four, three stone and one frame; Mill Creek, four three stone and one frame; Mission Creek, seven, four frame, and three stone; Wilmington, thirteen, seven stone and six frame; Rock Creek, six, four frame and two stone. The total number of school children enrolled in the county in 1881, was 2,306, of whom 1,238 were males, and 1,068 were females. The average daily attendance during the same year was: males; 591, females, 529; making a total of 1,120. This is not a fair criterion, however, of the number of pupils that attended school during the year, as in the winter season the attendance was about three times as large as during the summer months. The number of children in the county between the ages of five and twenty-one years, in 1881, was 3,211. of which number, the males were 1,707, and the females, 1.504. The average wages paid teachers for the same year was: males, $33.20 per month, and females, $27.34. If these rates of wages are compared with those paid in 1860, it will be found that they have nearly doubled. The average wages paid in 1860 was $16 per month. whereas in 1881, the average paid male teachers was $33.20, and females, $27.34, which shows, certainly, a very liberal advance. The schools are all well supplied with desks, blackboards, maps, charts, globes and other apparatus, and the grounds of many of them are beautifully ornamented with shade and other varieties of trees The present superintendent of schools is Mr. Matt Thomson.

Nearly every church organization in the county conducts a Sabbath-school in connection therewith, and to these and church matters generally the people give a good deal of attention. The first church built in the county was the Congregational at Wabaunsee, by the members of the "Beecher Rifle Company" in 1856, by money furnished by parties in Connecticut; and the first minister who held service within its walls, was Rev. Harvey Jones, who remained its pastor for several years. It was a frame building, but in 1868 the frame was moved away and a very fine stone edifice was erected where it stood. The first preacher that occupied the pulpit of the Congregational Church in Alma was Rev. Harvey Jones, although before the building was erected, services had occasionally been held by Rev. Darius Scott, who was the first minister that ever preached in the city of Alma

ALMA.

This is the shire town of the county, or the county-seat. Had it not been for the severance of territory by which the northwest and southwest corners of what constituted the county as originally established, Alma would be very near the geographical center of the county. It is located on the north side of Mill Creek on the side of the rising ground as it ascends from the valley. The rise upon which the town is built is not abrupt, but rises gradually towards the west, and when beyond the limits of the corporation the ground makes another dip until it rises in still higher hills farther west. Viewing the town from the hills on the east side of the creek, Alma seems to sit in a valley. Looking down from these hills the course of the stream can be seen through the timber; beyond the stream is the valley, on the west side of which is visible the track of the Santa Fe railway, and still beyond this the town commences. There are hills to the north, south, east and west of it, and the perspective is not bad, viewed from a distance. To the northeast of town can be seen the tower of the salt works, while to the northwest, considerably well elevated, stands the public schoolhouse, which is built of stone, is two stories high and of considerable dimensions. A short reference here as to the manner in which the town originally started may not be out of place. Taking advantage of an old law which existed in territorial days, by which a number of persons could form themselves into what was known as a "town company," and claim one hundred and sixty acres as a town site, a number of individuals in St. Louis organized themselves into such a company and sent Gottlieb Zwanziger out to Wabaunsee County to select a town claim. This was in 1857. Mr. Zwanziger selected for the company one hundred and sixty acres of land, a part of which is now embraced in the present corporate limits of Alma. To make these town claims good, the law required that the company by which a town site was selected should make certain improvements, by way of putting buildings within a certain time, in default of which their claim was forfeited.

The St. Louis company having allowed its claim to go by default, Mr. Zwanziger entered a claim in which was embraced eighty acres of the tract which had been originally selected by the company of St. Louis as a town site. After having secured his claim, Mr. Zwanziger set off forty acres for prospective town purposes. Nothing, however, was done towards building a town until after Alma became the county-seat in November, 1866. Shortly after the change in the county-seat was effected, an association of citizens of Alma Township was formed, their object being to take steps towards building a town. The forty acre tract which had been set apart by Mr. Zwanziger for this purpose was purchased of him by the Alma association, two hundred dollars being the price paid. The association then engaged Mr. Zwanziger to survey the tract and lay it off into streets, blocks, and lots. The town as thus surveyed and laid off became the stock of the association, which was divided into shares, each member taking so many shares and each share representing twenty-five dollars. Up to this time there was not a single house on the town site, notwithstanding the fact that it had been made the county-seat. The lots were offered at sale and from the proceeds first derived therefrom a frame building was erected on the southeast corner of Main and Missouri streets in which to transact the county business, and this was the first building put up in the town. About the same time that the building was put up for county purposes, a smaller one was built for the county clerk's office, a little south from the county building. These buildings were put up late in 1866. The next building erected in the town was the "Alma Hotel," which was built by John Winkler in the spring of 1867. It was erected on Missouri street nearly opposite the county building, and was of good proportions for a town without inhabitants. Mr. Winkler's wife was the first lady settler in Alma, and their son, Robert, was the first child born within the city limits. These three buildings constituted the nucleus of the present city of Alma. In 1868, it was incorporated as a village by the county commissioners, upon petition of the residents who then numbered about twenty. By the, then, law of the State the granting of licenses to sell liquor was left to the county commissioners, but in cities, towns and villages it was left to the corporate authorities. As the commissioners were opposed to granting liquor licenses, the object of having Alma incorporated as a village was to take the licensing power out of their hands and place it in the hands of the village council. The members of the first village council were S. R. Weed, chairman; August Meryor, Henry Schmidt, John Winkler and Herman Dicker. S. R. Weed acted also as police judge, and N. H. Whitmore was attorney for the council. Up to 1871, the growth of the town was very slow, but in February of that year another contest for the county-seat took place which resulted in favor of Alma. Greater faith in its future being now established, its growth became more rapid, and, though comparatively slow, was steady. The county-seat question having been settled in favor of Alma, the people of the town donated to the county four lots, and agreed to erect a stone court house at a cost not less than $6,000, upon condition that the county-seat should not be changed for twenty-one years; but in the event it should be, then the building and the lots should revert to the people of Alma. The proposition was accepted, and in 1872 a very fine stone court house was erected at a cost of $8,000. Of this amount $4,000 was raised by private subscription and the balance was paid by Alma Township. The next buildings of importance that went up in order of time, were the schoolhouse, which was erected in 1875, which is a fine, commodious structure two stories high and built of stone; the Catholic Church commenced in 1874 and completed in 1877, a very fine stone edifice; the German Lutheran, quite a large stone building and built in 1878; the Methodist Church, frame, erected in 1878; the German Evangelical Church, stone, built in 1881, and the Congregationalist Church, frame, constructed in 1881. In 1875 a party prospecting for coal commenced boring just outside the corporation line, and when down to a depth of 586 feet struck water strongly impregnated with salt. Upon this discovery being made a company was organized to establish salt works. The brine was of very superior quality and excellent salt was made from it; but owing to the high price of fuel, which rendered it impossible to carry on the works to paying advantage, after running at intervals for several years the works finally ceased operation in the spring of 1882. One chief drawback to the town, and, in fact, to the county, has been, that up until 1880 there was not a foot of railway in the county. The nearest railroad point to Alma was Manhattan, in Riley County, distant about twenty miles and situated on the north side of the Kansas River. In 1880 the A. T. & S. F. company built a railway diagonally across the county from northwest to southeast which runs within a few rods of the business portion of Alma. From this the town received quite an impetus, and since that time building has been carried on quite rapidly. The mercantile business of the place consists of four dry goods and clothing stores, one clothing and hardware, two hardware, two drug stores, one millinery establishment, one furniture store, one bank, one harness shop, two lumber yards, and two hotels, the "Winkler House" being the most commodious and best appointed. Most of the buildings are of stone, of which there is an endless supply in the vicinity and easily obtained. There are no manufacturing establishments in the city and its business is entirely supported by the farming community located up and down the valley, and from the farmers of Farmer and Washington Townships. Alma remained a village until February, 1871, when by an act of the Legislature it became a city of the third class, its first mayor being S. R. Weed. The census of 1880 showed the population of Alma to be 329, and it is now (1882) estimated at a little over 400, which would give it a gain of about 80 in two years. The first store built and opened in Alma was by Schmitz & Meyer in 1867, and the first school opened was in 1868, with Mr. Rush as teacher.

The first issue of the Wabaunsee County News was made at Alma, April 1, 1869, by A. Sellers and G. W. Bertram as editors and proprietors. It was then known as the Wabaunsee County Herald. Bertram sold his interest to S. H. Fairfield October 1, 1869, who became one of its editors and proprietors, and who, in March, 1871, became sole proprietor by purchasing the interest held by Sellers. After Mr. Fairfield had gained full control of the paper he changed its name to the Alma Union, and Rev. R. M. Trumbull became principal editor, which position he held until December 1, 1871. On May 1, 1872, Fairfield re-sold to Sellers, who became sole editor and proprietor, and by whom the name of the paper was again changed to the Wabaunsee County News, under which it has been regularly issued since that time. About the time Mr. Sellers re-purchased the paper, he transferred a half interest in it to his brother, George Sellers, and it has remained in their possession from that time until now. The paper is a weekly and is issued on Wednesday of each week. Its circulation is between 700 and 800, and it is devoted chiefly to the interests of Alma and Wabaunsee county. In politics it is Republican.

The Land Mark was the next paper that made its appearance as a county paper, and was started by E. H. Sandford in the spring of 1871, who was sole editor and proprietor. In the spring of 1874 the office and material were removed to Alma, where the paper was issued regularly until November, when it was moved back to Eskridge and soon thereafter the publication of the Land Mark was discontinued. The Alma Blade, was the next paper to spring into existence in the county and was started March 1, 1877, by R. Cunningham & Co. It was short-lived and expired in February, 1878. The Home Weekly was started in Alma, in October, 1881, with W. W. Cone editor. Its publication was continued at Alma until the spring of 1882, when the office was moved to Eskridge where it has been published and issued regularly each week since that time. It is a six column folio sheet, devoted to general news and the interests of Eskridge chiefly, and the county generally. It is Republican in politics, and has a circulation of between 400 and 500.

The Congregational Church of Alma is the oldest Protestant Church in the place. It was organized in 1875. It is a thriving society. Rev. John Scott is the present pastor.

They reached Kansas in September, 1856. The company were disarmed by United States troops on reaching the Territory. M., dimited from Fortitude Lodge, No. 19, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Has been in the real estate business since 1879.

WILLIAM T. MAHAN, County Surveyor, was born in 1844, upon what afterwards became the sanguinary battlefield of Antietam, Washington County, Md. While but a boy in years, he came to Kansas, and for several years kept a store or trading post in this county, near the Indian Reserve, which reserve he assisted the Government to survey in 1862. In August of the same year he enlisted in Company E, Eleventh Kansas Cavalry, participating in all the engagements of his regiment, and in 1865 was mustered out at Fort Leavenworth. He was subsequently appointed United States Surveyor, and was engaged in subdividing and sectionizing from the sixty-fifth to the hundredth meridian until the spring of 1870, when he returned to Alma, where he has since remained. He was under sheriff of the county, 1871–72; appointed Deputy United States Marshal, which position he held under Col. Houston until 1876, when he was elected County Surveyor, which office he still retains. During the time he kept the trading post, and afterwards, while on the plains, Mr. Mahan had many opportunities of studying Indian character. During a fight which took place in 1859, about five miles north of Alma, between the Pawnees and Pottawatomies, the former of whom had come to run off the latter's horses, Mr. Mahan lent his gun to a Pottawatomie, who, upon returning it afterwards, tricked out in feathers and ribbons, declared it was "mighty good gun; kill two Pawnee;" and insisted upon Mr. Mahan accompanying him to the camp of the victors, where the hearts and right hands of their dead enemies were roasted and eaten to "make Injun brave." Mr. Mahan is officer of the day of Lyon Post, No. 29, G. A. R.; Warden of Alma Lodge, No. 170, I. O. O. F., and charter member of Lodge 76, A. O. U. W. He owns a residence and four lots in town, is engaged in real estate business, and has always taken a lively interest in the welfare of his adopted State.

LOUIS PALENSKE, photographer, was born in Alma in 1858, his father having emigrated here from Pomerania, Germany, in 1855, and owning at the time of his death 260 acres in Alma Township. After leaving school here, Mr. Palenske acquired a thorough knowledge of photography, and opened a studio in his native town; in addition to which he conducts a newsroom and stationery store. He is a member of Alma Lodge, No. 170, I. O. O. F., and, although but a young man, has already established an excellent reputation in both social and business circles.

LORENZO PAULY, farmer, P. O. Alma, was born January 6, 1827, in the town of Adenan, District of Coblentz, Prussia. In early life he learned the trade of confectioner and baker, and in 1849 entered the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Infantry, in which he remained two years, seeing active service during the Austro-Prussian War of 1850. In March, 1852, he married Miss Wilhelmina Ruth, a native of Curhessen, Germany, by whom he has seven children. Mr. Pauly came to America in 1856, remaining for a time in the East, and coming to Kansas in 1857. He located first in Quindaro, four miles from Wyandotte, where he started a bakery; but in 1861 he removed to Topeka, where he again established himself in the bread and confectionery trade, remaining there fourteen years, and, finally removing to his present location, in this township, in 1875. Mr. Pauly is the proprietor of the "Mill Creek" flour mills, which contain four run of stones, one run being for corn grinding, and has a capacity of 250 bushels of grain per day. The motive-power is the Leffel, Ohio, turbine wheel, 40 horse-power. Besides the mill property and his residence, Mr. Pauly owns upwards of 800 acres of land in the township, Sections 14 and 15, and this year raised over 6,000 bushels of corn, averaging 63 bushels to the acre. He also deals extensively in stock, buying and shipping largely. During the Price excitement, Mr. Pauly's being the only bakery in Topeka, he was kept constantly busy, working day and night, and, almost unassisted, turned out 2,160 loaves of bread every twenty-four hours, with which to satisfy the militia and others then stationed in the town. He was elected County Commissioner in 1877, serving as such until 1882; and from 1877 to the present time he has been treasurer of the school board. Although a member of the Roman Catholic Church, he has contributed liberally to all the other churches in town, without regard to denominational lines, and has always taken a deep interest in the county's welfare and progress. He now represents Wabaunsee County in the Legislature of the State.

H. A. PIERCE, attorney, is a native of Orleans County, Vt. He received his education in the Newberry Collegiate Institute; at the age of twenty years removed to California, where he engaged in mining, farming and the study of law, being admitted to the bar in Sacramento in 1860, and to the Supreme Court of the United States in 1866, in Washington, D. C., where he had removed in 1864. From 1864 until the close of the war was employed by the Government on special service from City Point to Washington City. Resuming the practice of his profession in the National Capital, he remained there until 1869, when he removed to Yankton, D. T., where he remained two years as Commissioner of Emigration and Adjutant General of the Territory. In the fall of 1879 we find him in Arkansas, conducting the Jefferson Republican, at Pine Bluff, and the Patriot, at Fort Smith. He was also Superintendent of Public Instruction, at a salary of $3,000, and Brigadier-General of Militia. In the spring of 1879 he moved to Kansas, locating in Alma, and resumed the practice of his profession. He now owns 400 acres on Section 9, Township 12, Range 11, Newbury Township, and intends in the near future to devote his attention principally to stock-raising.

HENRY J. PIPPERT, Sheriff, was born in Cassel, Germany, in June, 1850. His father and family emigrated to America in 1855, locating for a time in Muscatine, Iowa, and in 1857 removing to Willow Springs, Kan., where the elder Mr. Pippert now resides. The subject of this sketch located in Lawrence, where he worked at his trade of harness-making, until 1871, when he came to Alma, and opened a large saddlery and harness-making establishment, upon Missouri street. Mr. Pippert carries several thousand dollars worth of stock and has several competent workmen constantly employed in the manufacture of harness. Besides his store and residence, Mr. Pippert owns other real estate (chiefly building lots) in town. November 12, 1874, he married Caroline, eldest daughter of John P. Gleich, Esq., of Alma, by whom he has had four children, only one of whom, Helen Mary, born December 4, 1880, now remains to him. Mr. Pippert has been Councilman for several years, was elected Mayor of Alma in April, 1880, and in 1881 was elected Sheriff of Wabaunsee County, in which position he has made a very efficient officer, proving quite a "terror" to evil-doers.

SYLVESTER ROSS, County Treasurer, was one of the early settlers of Kansas, and contributed much, by his untiring energy, in promoting the welfare of the young State. A native of Vermont, he settled in Ohio in 1825, and there married Miss C. Rice. In 1835 he removed to Indiana, and in 1846 to Rock County, Wis., where he remained until 1856, when he joined a party of eight families which had assembled in Milwaukee, Wis., and were about to start for "the West." His son, E. G. Ross, was chosen commander of the party, and the long and tedious wagon journey was made still more so from the fact, that having many women and children in the party, they were compelled to give Missouri a wide berth, owing to the unsettled and dangerous condition of society there, caused by the border ruffianism of that period. Upon arriving in Kansas, he located on Lot 1,312, Section 3, in Mission Creek Township, and subsequently took a prominent part in the formation of Wabaunsee County. He held the office of County Assessor for two terms, and was County Commissioner and Justice of the Peace for many years. He died in 1874 at the age of seventy-five years. During the war for the Union, four of his sons represented him in the Federal army—E. G., George, W. W. and Charles. E. G. Ross was United States Senator from this district from 1866 to 1870. W. W. Ross was Mayor of Topeka for several years, and, with his brother E. G., was one of the early newspaper editors of the State. Charles served with distinction during the war in Company F, Second Kansas Cavalry, and in 1872 removed from the old homestead to Alma upon being elected to the office of County Treasurer, which position he still fills. He is a member of Lyon Post, G. A. R.; charter member of Alma Lodge, No. 171, A., F. & A. M., and also of Alma Lodge, No. 170, I. O. O. F.

HENRY SCHMITZ, farmer, P. O. Alma, who now resides in a handsome stone house upon his farm of 160 acres, situated on Section 2, Town 12, Range 10, Mill Creek, came here in the spring of 1857 with a borrowed half dollar as his only cash capital. Born in the town of Siegburgin, Prussia, in 1823, he spent his early years upon his father's farm, and emigrated to America in 1852. Working for some time on railroads in Iowa and Missouri, until his final location in Kansas, he experienced all the hardships and privations incident to pioneer life. Ere selecting his claim upon Mill Creek, he, in the winter of 1857, accompanied by four others, left Westport upon an exploring expedition; besides the ox team, two of the party had horses; but about night fall they were overtaken by a blinding snow storm, and were compelled to camp in a ravine near where Eskridge now stands. Upon the return of daylight he, with Mr. Joseph Thoes, who had a cabin upon Mill Creek, mounted and sallied forth to discover, if possible, some road by which to continue their journey. Nothing met the eye but immense drifts into which both horse and rider often tumbled, and after floundering around for some time they were compelled to return to the wagons. Their provisions being frozen solid a fire was necessary, so breaking up the boxes contained in the wagon, they at length got one started, and using snow for water ere long were enabled to regale themselves with hot coffee. Thus refreshed they once more set out upon their journey, finally arriving at Mr. Thoes' house; but the weather continuing bad they were compelled to abandon the object of their trip, and after a rest of some days returned to Westport. During this journey Mr. Schmitz suffered from snow blindness, and his face became so blistered that his nearest friend failed to recognize him. Some idea of the difficulty of such traveling may be had, when we state that it often took them seven hours to make three miles. Mr. Schmitz was in the militia during the border troubles; and in 1866, engaged in business as storekeeper in Alma, but in 1875, he sold out and returned to the farm. Besides the "Homestead Farm," Mr. Schmitz has 220 acres in other sections, his average yield of wheat is 25 bushels to the acre, and of corn 60 bushels. His stock at present comprises 100 head of cattle, 9 horses and 100 hogs. His residence and out-buildings are insured. In September, 1868, he married Miss Lena Lines, by whom he has had six children. Mr. Schmitz was Township Trustee for two years, and four years County Commissioner, and by his strict integrity and sterling character has long held the esteem and confidence of the community. To his personal efforts and generosity is Wabaunsee County greatly indebted for its prosperity.

REV. JOHN SCOTT, is a native of Waterbury, Conn., and soon after the close of the war, was sent South by the American Missionary Association of New York, then connected with the Freedman's Bureau, where he remained eight years engaged in missionary work such as distribution of clothing, food, etc., to the negroes, and organizing schools and churches. He organized the First Congregational Church in North Carolina, eight miles south of Goldsboro. Upon his return East he attended the Oberlin College and Theological Seminary of Ohio, of which he is a graduate. At the invitation of the Home Missionary Society he came to Alma to take charge of the church, there erecting a house of worship, which was dedicated August 28, 1881. He is a hard working clergyman, having done much to increase the numbers of his congregation, and has two other missions in his charge. He is as yet unmarried, and still maintaining his connections with his native State where he has property, he annually visits it for the benefit of his health, which is not of the most robust nature, as also to keep up with the theological world in the East, in its march of progress.

JOSEPH THOES, merchant, was born in Germany, November 15, 1828; and lost his mother while he was yet a boy in years. His father with the children emigrated to Algeria, Africa, in 1845, but he and two of his children dying there, the care of the family fell to Joseph, who in October of that year accompanied by his brothers and sisters, sailed for Toulon, France, where they remained until 1851, when Mr. Thoes, after a short visit to his native land, emigrated to America, arriving in New York, July 7, 1851, and remaining there fifteen months, from thence to Westport, Mo., finally locating in Kansas, in 1855, upon Mill Creek, this county. He built the first house (of logs) in what is now Farmer Township, where he now owns a fine farm of 300 acres, also residence and three acres in Alma. In 1862 he married Miss Augusta Dieball, of Alma, by whom he has six children ranging in age from six months to twenty years. During the Free-State or Border Ruffian times, Mr. Thoes was on his way to Westport with his team for the purpose of procuring provisions, and upon reaching a point a little east of Palmyra, a scene of devastation met his astonished gaze. Where formerly had stood rude, but prosperous and happy homes nothing now remained but ashes, and black and smouldering ruins; the work of the infamous Price or others of that ilk. Upon his return journey he stopped for food and rest at Indian Creek, and, while reclining by the side of his wagon, he was surprised to see a man emerge from the woods close by, approach and beg for food. Mr. Thoes at once invited him to share his repast, and when the poor fellow had satisfied his hunger, he informed Mr. Thoes that he was a native of Pennsylvania, who had with his wife and children located near Palmyra some time previous; that he and another had been surprised and taken prisoners by a party of ruffians commanded by Milton McGee, who shot his companion dead at Cedar Creek, while he was marched towards Kansas City, but on the way was confined in a log house where he remained for two days without food or water; but on the third day during the absence of his captors he broke through the roof and escaped to the timber, where he had remained secreted, until seeing Mr. Thoes. Our friend conveyed him in his wagon to the vicinity of Palmyra, which the fugitive reached in due time only to find his home in ashes, and learn that his wife, believing him dead, had with her children returned to Pennsylvania. His companion's body was afterwards found nearly devoured by wolves. Mr. Thoes was County Commissioner for four years, and has ever taken an important and prominent part on all measures tending to the progress and improvement of the county. He now represents as manager the E. B. Purcell Elevator Company's Alma Branch.

MATTHEW THOMSON, County Superintendent, was born in Lincoln County, Tenn., in 1843. Received his education in Fayette Academy, and with his father, Mr. James L. Thomson, located in Wabaunsee County, in 1857. Besides devoting his attention to his farm of 160 acres in Wilmington Township, he was a school teacher for twelve years. He has been Township Clerk three terms, and is now County Superintendent of schools for the third term. Nor could the county make a better selection; himself an artist of no mean ability, an accomplished scholar and thorough gentleman, the cause of education finds in him a warm and able advocate, and Wabaunsee County will perhaps never fully realize the benefits derived from his wisdom and experience in educational training. In 1878, he married Miss Agnes Henderson, of Mission Creek Township, this county. Was a member of the Union army during the war, serving for a time in the Quartermaster's Department. In 1863, took part in Sully's expedition against, and fight with, the hostile Indians; and ere twenty years of age had experienced many of the hardships, privations, and thrilling incidents which fell to the lot of the soldier on the Western plains during those exciting times. He is the possessor of several interesting Indian relics andc uriosities. Mr. Thomson has also draughted several county and township maps of the State, and a very interesting and instructive chart relative to the discovery of America, and another which contains in a very brief space, yet clearly set forth, all the American and British land and naval engagements, Indian wars and massacres, etc.

R. A. WALD, under-sheriff, is a native of Berlin, Prussia, and was born in 1849, arriving in America with his parents in 1856, and receiving his education in Burlington, Racine Co., Wis., where his father had located, and where he, for many years, carried on an extensive tannery. The subject of this sketch upon attaining to manhood's years acted as his father's traveling salesman, and subsequently for a Milwaukee hide and leather house. Owing to the delicate health of his wife, whom Mr. Wald was compelled to remove to a milder climate, he, in 1878, located in this county, and turned his attention to insurance, representing the German Fire Insurance Company, of Freeport, Ill.; Connecticut, of Hartford; Home and Star Companies, of New York, and Union, of Philadelphia. Mr. Wald is a constable of the township, and also under-sheriff of the county.

JOHN WINKLER, was born in 1829, in the town of Renzhausen, Hanover, and received his education in the college of Hildesheim, after which he entered the army as a private, but was subsequently promoted to the rank of lieutenant for bravery in the field during the Austro-Prussian war. He remained sixteen years in the army, received several wounds in action, and possesses several medals as evidences of valor. March 6, 1860, he married Miss Lena Marten, also a Hanoverian, by whom he has six children—Augusta and Amelia, being born in Hanover, and Robert (mentioned elsewhere as the first white male child born in Alma), Arthur, Otto and Lena being born in this State. Mr. Winkler came to Alma, his first location in America, August 13, 1866, and built the first hotel here which he continued to "run" for two and-a-half years, when he sold out and removed to Maple Hill, where he turned his attention to farming. He was trustee of the townships of Newbury, Kaw and Maple Hill for several years, and postmaster of the latter place from 1871 to 1874, when he returned to Alma, and bought the building (to which he made considerable additions), now owned and occupied by him, and known as the "Winkler House," one of the best hotels in this part of the State. The house contains upwards of twenty rooms, a large and pleasant dining room, where the wants of the inner-man are well cared for by his amiable daughter, Miss Amelia, who is an experienced and efficient caterer. Sample rooms for commercial men, and a free 'bus runs to and from all trains. Mr. Winkler has recently purchased 600 acres of land, situated about seven miles from Alma, upon which are several never failing springs of good water, and intends to engage extensively in stock-raising. A very extensive lead of excellent fire clay, suitable for brick or pottery is now being opened upon it.

GOTTLIEB ZWANZIGER, farmer, P. O. Alma, was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1822. He received his education in the Polytechnical Institute of Munich, graduating with honor in 1840. He was called to the army in 1844, and commissioned a Lieutenant of topographical engineers. Being dissatisfied with the reaction that took place after the revolution in the year 1848, he resigned in 1849. In 1850 he married Miss Theresa Von Orff, and shortly afterward emigrated to this country and settled for two years in St. Louis, Mo., pursuing his profession of civil engineer. From 1852 to 1856 he was topographical engineer and inspector of masonry on the Iron Mountain Railroad, and in 1857 he located in the township of Alma, Wabaunsee County, Kansas, upon Section 10, Town 12, Range 10, where he still resides. The greater part of his farm is under cultivation, with an average yield of wheat of eighteen bushels to the acre, and corn forty bushels. Eighty acres are laid out in town site of Alma. Coming here while the country was in its infancy Mr. Zwanziger took an active part in advancing the interests of the township. He built the first grist-mill and assisted in organizing and building the German Evangelical Church. In 1862 he entered the United States army as Captain of Engineers on Gen. Sherman's staff, retiring from the army in 1862. During the Price raid he was Major of militia on Gen. Curtis' staff and post engineer at Topeka. Mr. Zwanziger was one of the first three Commissioners appointed to organize Wabaunsee County, and remained County Commissioner from 1858 to 1862. During Col. Fremont's Presidency of the Kansas Pacific Railroad, Mr. Zwanziger was civil engineer of the road, and now acts as its land agent. He also represents several insurance companies and is passage ticket agent for no less than seven ocean steamship companies. He has been Justice of the Peace for the past twelve years, and held the office of County Surveyor fourteen years.

WABAUNSEE.

This place can not be called a town, nor can it, properly, be named a village. True, it has a very fine church edifice, and a good schoolhouse, both built of stone. It has also a post-office and one store, but aside from these there is an utter absence of those characteristics peculiar to a village. There are not over ten or a dozen houses in the whole place, and these are scattered and far apart. For a town site, however, it would be difficult to find a more beautiful place. It is located in the northeast portion of the county on the south side of the Kansas River, on the second rise from the stream. It is the oldest settlement in the county, the town site having been selected and platted by the "Beecher Rifle Company" in 1856. It was the county-seat from 1859, to the time it was removed to Alma in 1866. Here was erected by the same company, the first church in the county, a frame building, which served the treble purpose of church, schoolhouse, and place of holding company meetings. It was more of a town ten years ago than it is to-day, and since the county-seat was removed from there, it has been constantly on the decline. As already intimated, the earliest settlers of the place were members of the "Beecher Company," a few of whom still remain. Rev. Harvey Jones, whom the American Missionary Association sent to Kansas and who located with his family in Wabaunsee in 1855, still resides close to the village or about three-fourths of a mile from the depot. Capt. Mitchell, who was one of the "Beecher Company," resides in the village, and performs the double duty of carrying on a store and being station agent. C. B. Lines, who was the first president of the "Beecher Company," resides about one-half mile from the village. J. M. Bisby, one of the 1855 settlers, resides a little farther away than Mr. Lines, while E. R. Weed, one of the 1857 Minden Volunteers, is postmaster of the village and carries on a small store in connection therewith. The first school taught in the county was in Wabaunsee, and the first teacher was D. B. Hiatt. Here was located the first post-office in the county, and the first postmaster was J.H. Nesbitt. Here was performed the first marriage ceremony in the township and the second in the county, the parties being E. C. D. Lines and Grace A. Thomas, which was solemnized by Rev. Harvey Jones. The incidents of early days in Kansas that cluster around Wabaunsee, even though its greatness has passed from it, will always give it an important place in Wabaunsee County history.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

J. T. COLLINS, farmer, Section 36, P. O. Wabaunsee, was born in 1848 in Lexington, Ky., where, after completing his education, he engaged in farming until his removal to Illinois, in 1865, where he remained until the spring of 1880, when he removed to Junction City, this State. Was engaged in school teaching until his removal to this county, in 1881, when he located on the above Section. About one-half of his land is under cultivation, wheat averaging twenty-three bushels per acre. Mr. Collins is married and has one child. In the spring of 1881 he entered into partnership with Mr. A. Sellers as stock and grain dealers. Mr. Collins also deals extensively in coal, game, pelts, etc. Mr. Collins is an intelligent and shrewd business man and bids fair to soon become one of the leading men of his township and county.

JAMES P. GOFF, farmer, Section 23, Township 10, Range 9, P. O. Wabaunsee, was born in Lawrence County, Ohio, in 1843. Received his education in the public schools, after which he worked upon his stepfather's farm until he was thirteen years of age, then left him and went to work for Thomas Gardner, of Lawrence County, Ohio, at $10 per month. Worked for him until the war broke out, when he enlisted in Battery H, First Virginia Light Artillery, and participated in all its engagements—viz., Winchester, Va., Droop Mountain, where he was wounded by a minnie ball in his left leg and by a piece of shell in the left side, near the abdomen, the marks of which still remain, but he refused to be invalided and still stuck to his gun; Moorfield, Rock Gap, Va., and the second battle of Winchester, Maryland Heights and Charlestown. He is in possession of a very complimentary address to him from his commanding officer, in which a high tribute is paid to his valor and courage as a man and soldier, being termed one of the heroes of 1861, '62, '63 and '64. He was mustered out at Wheeling, W. Va., October 22, 1864, with the rank of Corporal. Upon leaving the army Mr. Goff repaired to Scott Town, Ohio, where he remained nine months as clerk in a general store, at the end of which time he engaged in business on his own account at Millsville, Ohio, in which he continued until his removal to Kansas, in January, 1867. He has upwards of 300 acres of good land near Deep Creek, one-third being under cultivation, with an average yield of wheat of twenty bushels and corn fifty bushels per acre. Of stock he has at present seventy-five head of cattle, ten horses and thirty hogs. In 1878 he built his present fine stone residence and outbuildings, having quarried and drawn all the material himself during two preceding winters. His residence, etc., are fully insured. In May, 1867, Mr. Goff married Miss M. V. Russell, of Ohio, by whom he has four children. Mr. G. has never accepted any political office, but has always taken a deep interest in the welfare of the State. He is a charter member of Lew Gove Post, G. A. R., of Manhattan, and also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

REV. HARVEY JONES, of Wabaunsee, was born near Pittsburgh, Pa., in June, 1821. He received his early education in the academy in Bakerstown, Pa. Subsequently he attended Franklin College, New Athens, Ohio; was a student in Oberlin College, and graduated from the theological course in 1852. The following year he spent in Illinois, preaching in Lombard, then known as Babcock's Grove. In the spring of 1855 he removed to Kansas Territory, locating near his present home. During the "border troubles" he was active in efforts to secure the State for freedom. Mr. Jones is one of the oldest settlers of Wabaunsee County, there being but few families when he came, in June, 1855. He engaged at once in pioneer work, preaching as opportunity offered in tent, sod house, log cabin or in groves, "God's first temples," in Wabaunsee, Greendale and Ashland, until the organization of the "First Church of Christ" in Wabaunsee in 1857, of which he was the first pastor. In 1860 Mr. Jones returned to Ohio, and preached at Monroe, Ashtabula County, four years, till near the close of the war. He was one of the 100,000 volunteers, "Squirrel Hunters," who at the call of the Governor hastened to the defense of Cincinnati when threatened by Kirby Smith, of the Rebel army. On his return to Kansas, in 1864, he became pastor of the Congregational Church in Geneva, Allen County. While there he was several times a volunteer for the defense of various points, twice to Humboldt and once to Fort Scott, in the famous Price raid. In the fall of 1866 he was appointed Superintendent of Home Missions for the State. From 1870 to 1872 he preached at Valley Falls, when he returned to his first home in Wabaunsee, since which time he has been engaged in home mission work in new and needy fields in various parts of the State. Soon after commencing his work in the ministry he was married to Miss H. N. Keyes, of Windsor, Morgan Co., Ohio. They have four children living—Carrie, born December 10, 1857, at Wabaunsee; Henry Martyn, born December 19, 1859, at Wabaunsee; Horace Bushnell, born June 5, 1861, in Monroe, Ohio; Emma, born November 30, 1863, in Monroe, Ohio. Recently Mr. Jones has relinquished preaching in part and is devoting his attention to horticulture and the interests of his farm.

DAVID McNAIR, farmer, Section 16, P. O. Wabaunsee, was born in February, 1845, near Londonderry, Ireland, and followed the ancestral occupation of a farmer until his emigration to America, in 1864. Upon his arrival in this country he settled for a time in New Jersey, removing to Princeton, Ill., in 1867, where he remained until 1869, when he came to Kansas, locating on 125 acres on above named section, about seventy-five acres of which are under cultivation and about twenty acres in timber. As Mr. McNair raises considerable stock his grain is chiefly corn, averaging sixty bushels per acre, the balance of ground being devoted to turnips, potatoes, etc. At present he has thirty head of cattle, twelve horses and about fifty hogs. Besides his farm residence, Mr. McNair has real estate in the town, all his property being insured. March 1, 1856, he married Miss Bell, a countrywoman of his own, by whom he has had ten children, five of whom were carried off within two weeks by diphtheria. His five remaining ones are: Alexander, Martha, Sarah, David and Emma. Mr. McNair has never cared to accept political honors in any form, but has ever striven in every honorable manner to advance the interests of the community, and votes as his conscience approves.

ROBERT McNAIR, farmer, P.O. Wabaunsee, was born in Wigtonshire, Scotland, in December, 1846, and, after completing his education, went to the neighboring town of Kirkcudbright to study civil engineering, but sickness and death at home compelled him to relinquish the idea and attend to the farm, thus becoming the sole stay of the family. For several years he engaged in business as a merchant in his native place, but in 1869 he went to the west of England, where he remained for a time, finally coming to America in 1874. He first located in Coffey County, where he remained one year, and then to his present location on Section 19, where he owns 600 acres, 200 or so being under cultivation, and realizing this past four years above the average of his neighbors in yield. He has a very nice stock of yearlings, besides horses, hogs, etc., and has house, etc., insured. While in England he married Miss M. K. McDonald, by whom he has had two children. Mr. McNair does not care to interest himself in politics, and is not a member of any secret society, being content, as he expresses it, to "tak care o' the wife and weans."

CAPT. WILLIAM MITCHELL was born in 1825 in Kilmarnock, Scotland, and while yet an infant his parents emigrated to Middletown, Conn. He received his education in the common schools there. In 1849 he went to California, from thence to Australia, in 1853, and in 1855 returned by way of Great Britain to Connecticut. In 1856 Mr. Mitchell formed one of the Beecher Rifle Company, and upon his arrival in Kansas located in Wabaunsee upon what is now the east half of Section 28, Township 10, Range 10. He experienced all the hardships incident to the Kansas settler of that period. Desirous of seeing Kansas a free State he took a prominent part in assisting to repel the border ruffians, and was in command of the forty men who went to the assistance of Lawrence during Gov. Geary's administration. He was one of the first Commissioners of this county upon its organization, and in 1868 was elected to the Legislature. In 1868 he married Miss Mary N. Chamberlain, of Middletown, Conn., by whom he has four children. Capt. Mitchell has always been a Republican in politics and a strong advocate of prohibition.

ENOCH PLATT, farmer, P. O. Wabaunsee, was born in Plymouth, Conn., in 1825, and with his parents removed to Adams County, Ill., in 1834, where he remained until 1858, when he located on Section 5, ninety acres of which are under cultivation. During his early life Mr. Platt was one of the most successful conductors on the "Underground Railroad," he and his father being strong "Free-State" men, there being at one time $1,000 offered for his head. Many narrow escapes can he relate, but he does not feel so disposed. He suffered extensively in loss of horses, etc., at various times. Mr. Platt was in the State militia during the Price raid, and has been School Trustee, Township Clerk, County Commissioner and Justice of the Peace for several years, and is a member of the Congregational Church.

SAMUEL WEED, postmaster, was born in 1833 in Marblehead, Mass., where he remained until 1850, when he went to Adams County, Ill., where he engaged in school teaching until 1856, when he removed to Kansas, locating in Wabaunsee, and engaged in farming, but some years ago sold his farm and opened a general store in town, which he still conducts. In July, 1882, he was appointed postmaster. Mr. Weed was Register of Deeds from 1861 to 1871; County Treasurer from 1862 to 1866; Clerk of the District Court from 1863 to 1870, and County Clerk four years. At present he holds the office of Township Clerk. He has ever been active in the Republican ranks and in 1869 was elected to represent his county in the State Legislature.

ESKRIDGE.

Eskridge is a town situated in the north of Wilmington Township, and is located on the branch of the A., T. & S. Fe R. R. running from Burlingame to Manhattan. The town was first laid out by Col. E. H. Sanford in 1868, twelve years before the branch road mentioned was built, but, like many other Western towns, about the only thing it had to indicate it was a town, before the coming of the railway, was its name. In 1880, the Santa Fe railway company selected a town site of their own adjoining that of Col. Sandford's, which they had surveyed, platted, and laid off into lots, and thus is the town known now as Eskridge. The town is situated in the center of a large stretch of prairie, miles from either timber or stream. The land upon which it is built is high and dry, sloping gradually from all sides for some distance, when it again takes an upward turn and rolls away in gentle undulations to the south, while to the north the tendency is upward until the high bluffs are reached which characterize the center of the county. The town has had a wonderful growth for its age. The first house built in the place was in June, 1880, by Dr. Trivet, and though only two years have elapsed since then, it has now a population of about 450. The schoolhouse was built in 1881, and the first teacher was Miss Emma Henderson. The number of pupils attending the school is 124. The church was built in 1881, and has now a membership of 75. There are two drug stores in the town, three dry goods stores, two hardware stores, one harness shop, two millinery establishments, one boot and shoe store, and two grocery stores. The first store put up in the town was the grocery store of William Earl, in 1881. Thre are two hotels in the place, the "Lawlor House," built by J. H. Lawlor, and the "Santa Fe House," erected by Joseph Emmerson, both of which were built in 1880. The chief business of the place is in putting up and exporting baled hay, of which not less than twenty thousand tons will be shipped this season. At an average of $3.00 per ton, this will bring a return of $60,000, a pretty good revenue for a small place.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JONAS BARRETT, dealer in boots and shoes, is a native of Dutchess County, N. Y., where he was born in 1837, and received but a common school education. At an early age he learned the trade of shoemaker, at which he worked until the outbreak of the war, when he enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Sixty-ninth New York Regiment, but was assigned to saddlery duty after seventeen months' active service. At the close of the war he removed to Kansas City until 1871, when he removed to Eskridge and engaged in business for himself. He now owns a fine stock of boots and shoes. He owns his store and residence as also several town lots. He is a charter member of Eskridge Post 75, G. A. R., and also A. G. of Eskridge Lodge No. 200, I. O. O. F., and charter member of Eminence Lodge A. F. and A. M.

W. W. CONE, editor, is a native of Chautauqua, N. Y., where he was born in 1828. He received his education in the common schools, and after a short desultory study of law turned his attention to literature, and worked at the case on the Syracuse Herald for a time, then came to Kansas in 1856, locating in Topeka, where he remained until the breaking out of the war, when he enlisted in Company I, Eleventh Kansas Regiment, and served until the fall of 1865, when he was mustered out, owing to disability. He returned to Topeka, and upon recovering his health became connected with the Topeka Capital and Kansas Farmer. In October, 1881, he bought the Alma Herald of J. B. Campbell, and removing press, etc., to Eskridge, changed the name to the Home Weekly. Mr. Cone has always been a staunch Republican, and his paper has now upwards of 540 paying subscribers. He owns office and residence besides several town lots. Has always taken a deep interest in the welfare of his adopted State, having in 1877, published a history of Shawnee County. He is a member of Eskridge Post G. A. R., and in February 15, 1882, he organized Eminence Lodge No. 205, A. F. & A. M., of which he is now Secretary. Excepting the office of postmaster of Eskridge, which he held for a short time, he has never held nor sought any political honors.

EZRA R. COXEN, builder, etc., was born in Blair County, Pa., May 25, 1837, and after attending the district school learned the trade of house carpenter, at which he worked in Wilmington, Del., and other places, finally in 1856, establishing himself in the city of Brotherly Love, where he married Miss Anna B. Pancoast. Upon the cry for men to save the Union he arranged his affairs, leasing his business for three years, and assisted in organizing Company F, Twenty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, being assigned as sergeant, but was subsequently detailed to special service in commissary department. He served until the early part of August, 1864, when he was mustered out on account of ill-health superinduced by exposures. Shortly after his return home he removed with his family to Berks County, Pa., where his wife had property, and in 1868, came to Kansas, locating for a few months in Lawrence, but removing to Eskridge in 1871. He has built the majority of the stores and residences since erected in the township, and his eldest son is now associated with him in business. He owns his own residence besides several town lots; is a charter member of Eskridge Lodge of Odd Fellows, having been its first "N. G.," and was also the First Adjutant of Eskridge Post G. A. R. He is a Republican in politics, but has never taken a very active part in public affairs.

HON. EPHRAIM H. SANFORD was born January 24, 1822, at Cancadea, Allegany County, N. Y. In 1835, his father settled in Livingston County, State of Michigan. He studied the law with Hon. A. L. Roof, at Lyons. For several years he devoted part of his time as editor and publisher, having purchased the Ann Arbor True Democrat, a free-soil democratic paper of extensive circulation. On the breaking out of the war with Mexico, he warmly advocated the "manifest destiny" policy. Receiving a telegram to go on to Washington to take orders from the Government to Mexico, he sold his paper to his brothers. Reaching Cleveland, his family was taken sick, which detained him so long, he was obliged to abandon his journey, and located on the Western Reserve, where he edited the Akron Free Democrat through an election campaign. He attended the Buffalo Convention in 1848. His speech, Wednesday evening, was mainly devoted to the election of United States Senators, the President and Vice-President, by the direct vote of the people. This speech was reported in part, the next morning, in the Buffalo Daily Republic. After locating at New London, Ohio, he opened a law office with Rollin C. Powers, where he published in 1851 a small work on political subjects, chiefly devoted to the measures already indicated. This work was extensively published and favorably received by the press. At New London he was postmaster through several administrations. He was also holding his second term as mayor when he moved to Kansas, locating at Marysville, Marshall County, devoting his time to the practice of the law on the Circuit. When the war broke out in 1861, although strongly urged by some of his democratic friends to chance his fortunes with the Confederates, he was prompt to decline all offers in that direction, and set himself at once to work in raising troops for the war for the Union. On the 4th of July of that year he delivered a stirring oration to a large assembly of people at Barrett's Mills, in that county. Soon after, it being reported that the Indian tribes on the west were approaching the settlements with a field-piece, headed by a notorious secessionist, the country became alarmed. The Indians were aggressive and impudent. The border was well nigh depopulated. It was at this juncture that it became necessary to send a force to reconnoiter the west and northwest, and keep between the Indians and the settlements. Col. Sanford was placed in command of this force. The duty was ably and successfully performed. On their return to Irving, Col. Sanford and his men received the thanks of a meeting presided over by Hon. Thomas H Baker, then principal of the high school at that place. Soon after he was employed as attorney for the Santa Fe Mail Company, which was in failing circumstances, and suits against the company were commenced in the several counties along the line. A part of his time was directed by the company to a contest of the town site of Council Grove as a mail station. This contest was for several years pending in the Interior Department, where it was decided sometimes for one, and then re-opened and decided in favor of the other party. While in charge of the several mail stations, he was elected in the eastern district of Lyon County, by only three dissenting votes, to the State Legislature, where he distinguished himself, in 1866, in aiding in the establishment of four new railroads traversing the State, one of them passing through his district. He served on the Judiciary and Federal relation committees, and was chairman of the committee on the State Library. He was the author of several bills which became and still remain the laws yet in force. For part of the term he served as Judge of the District Court. For about twenty years he has held the office of postmaster at Eskridge. He was the first to lay out the town, which he owned, with other lands adjacent, in all, about 600 or 700 acres. The town has become one of some importance under his management, chiefly. The railroad company has since laid out an addition, while other roads have been surveyed and bonds voted to some of them. Mr. Sanford is now considerably advanced in years, but his appearance does not indicate his age. He is known for his kindness of heart, liberal in his views, and his success, as a criminal lawyer, is well known throughout the State. In politics he is progressive; and amongst the measures already stated, he favors the placing of all towering and threatening monopolies in the hands of the general Government. He is, this year, the commander of a flourishing Post (G. A. R.) in the town of Eskridge, Wabaunsee County, Kan., with which town he has abundant reason to be delighted. One thing is remarkable—he has never suffered his name to be presented as a candidate for any office in any political convention; and, though he feels a strong sense of duty to the country, he is in no sense a partisan, and yet he has generally voted with the Republican party since the war.

M. F. TRIVETT, M. D., was born in Ash County, N. C., in 1845, and attended the district school until the age of sixteen, when he enlisted in the Confederate army and attached to Bragg's Division, although he served immediately under Gen. Patten. He remained with the Confederate army until early in 1864. When stationed at Newberry, S. C., the entire Rebel division went over to the Federal army, and the doctor was entered in Company B, Fifty-third Ohio. He was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., in September, 1865. After the war he removed to Missouri, where he for a time engaged in farming. Finally he attended Rush Medical College of Chicago, graduating in 1879. He then removed to Kansas, locating in Eskridge, where he opened a drug store and commenced the practice of his profession. He is W. M. of Eminence Lodge, No. 205, A. F. & A. M., and was the first Commander of Eskridge Post, No. 75, G. A. R., which was organized June 17, 1882, with twenty-three charter members.

A. J. WARD, M. D., was born in Kent County, Delaware, November 14, 1832, and graduated in 1854 from Union and Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, Pa., after which he practiced in his native State until November, 1870, when he located in North Topeka, taking Dr. Ashmore's practice until 1871, when he removed to Eskridge, his present location. The doctor has a very large practice throughout the surrounding country, and is spoken of as very skillful. He is a member of Eminence Lodge, A. F. & A. M.

MICHAEL HUNDT, farmer, P. O. Newbury, was born in Baden, Germany, in 1828, and with several of his townsmen, emigrated to Missouri in 1852. He settled in Minnesota, and farmed there eighteen years. He removed to Kansas in the fall of 1872, locating upon his present farm of 420 acres, situated in different sections. He has good water privileges, and 345 acres under cultivation. He devotes his attention principally to wheat. His yield this year (1882) being about the average. He has a fine orchard of peach and apple trees. Does not keep much stock. He was married in Missouri and has eight children living, the eldest boy being in his thirty-second year. Since settling here he has caused many of his relatives and friends to emigrate to this country. He is liberal in his views, and contributes to all enterprises in his district when called upon. He has been Justice of the Peace and Township Trustee several times, but prefers now to leave the care of affairs in younger hands.

JOHN KOPP, farmer, P. O. Newbury, was born in Germany in 1819, and upon leaving the provincial school was apprenticed to his father as a tanner, and upon the expiration of apprenticeship he went to the town of Guttenburg, and worked for a short time at his trade. In 1850 he married Miss Katrina Getlin, and emigrated to America, landing in New Orleans, where he remained but a short time, going to St. Louis, Mo., where he again resumed his trade until 1853 or 1854. He, with Mr. M. Muckentheler and several other German families set out for Kansas, first locating in Wabaunsee, and finally taking a squatter's claim on Section 4, as it since became by survey. Being the only white man within several miles of the Indian Reserve, he suffered for some time very much from their thieving depredations. He now owns 460 acres, fully two-thirds of which are under cultivation, and has been very successful as a wheat-grower, his yield being for the past ten years fully twenty-four to thirty bushels per acre, with corn averaging fifty-five. Of course, he, with others of the early settlers of the county, marched to repel the raid of Price during the border ruffian days; and he has ever since taken a prominent part in every public or private work in the county, being sometimes spoken of as the father of Newbury Township. He has held the office of Township Treasurer for many years; has also been County Treasurer and County Commissioner, being one of the first to hold the latter. He has been for many years past, a Justice of the Peace. He is not a member of any church or society, but whenever called upon contributes liberally to all.

ELIJAH McCRUM, farmer, P. O. Alma, was born in Wexford County, Ireland, on October 17, 1837, and for some time worked on his father's farm; finally going to Belfast, he got employment in a linen mill, and at night attended school, thus laying the foundation of a good education. Went to Glasgow for a short time; then to Manchester, England, where he acted as traveler for a manufacturing house for four years; but the firm failing, he was thrown out of employment; but his father soon after dying, he fell heir to a considerable property, and decided to come to America. He remained a few months East, and then came to Kansas. He now owns 360 acres of fine land, near Paxico; wheat good; cattle, 30; horses and mules, 9. He also possesses some very fine imported Cotswold and Leicester sheep for breeding. He has been in several minor county offices, and is now County Commissioner.

JOHN MONCK, farmer, P. O. Newbury, although by birth a Belgian, came to this country when very young, his parents having emigrated and settled in Belmont County, Ohio. He received his education at the district school, and partly from his father. Nothing eventful occurred to him until 1856, when he formed one of the second detachment of the Ohio colony, who, having heard of the fertility of Kansas Territory, came here. He took a squatter's claim on Pappan Creek, upon what has since been sectionized as Section 17, Township 10, Range 8, and had scarcely begun to fence and improve when the border troubles occurred, and he formed one of Capt. Krapp's company to repel Price. In other respects he took a prominent and active part in the interests of the growing community. He now owns in all, upwards of 460 acres, his average yield of wheat being 22 to 25 bushels, and corn 60 to the acre. He has 87 head of cattle, 21 horses, besides 50 or more hogs and calves. He assisted in contributing liberally to the building of the court house, and also the various churches. While in Ohio, he married Miss Louisa Merrick, by whom he has nine children living. He has 225 acres under cultivation, all bottom land; his yield of wheat this year averaged 18 to 20, with corn 50 bushels per acre. Besides the above he has 400 acres of grazing land upon which he has 200 head of stock. Residence, out-buildings and grain in stack fully insured. Mr. True has been one year Township Clerk, and Trustee three years; he was also County Commissioner in 1874 and 1875, and is at present Township Trustee. He is a Republican in politics, but takes no interest in societies.

J. W. CORE, farmer, P. O. Eskridge, was born November 18, 1840, in Trumbull County, Ohio, and received but a common school education, his father being a farmer, who thought it better for his boys to work than to go to school; yet, Mr. Core often sat up late nights until he could glean from the fields of knowledge. Upon the breaking out of the war he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Third Ohio, and participated in all the engagements of his regiment, until the expiration of his three years' term of enlistment, when he removed to Kansas, locating for a short time in Wabaunsee, finally settling in Wilmington Township, where he owns 320 acres, upwards of 200 of which are under cultivation He has taken great interest in the welfare of his adopted State; he has held several minor township offices, and has twice been elected County Commissioner, holding that office at the present time. He remained with his regiment, and participated in all its battles until the close of the war, and upon being mustered out found the close air of a store uncongenial after a soldier's life, so in 1868, he drifted to Kansas, and located first on Rock Creek, but has since bought 850 acres in the adjoining township. His wheat yield is not above the average; his corn this and last three years averaging sixty bushels. He devotes his time principally to raising, buying and shipping cattle and hogs to Eastern markets. At present he has 315 head of cattle with about 400 hogs, 23 horses. M., and Presbyterian Church; his wife is also a member of the same religious society. He takes an active interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of his county and State.

G. W. VEST, farmer, P. O. Harveyville, came to Kansas in 1862. He enlisted in January, 1863, in Company I, Second Kansas Regiment, and was transferred to the Sixth Iowa Cavalry, and sent to Dakota, under Gen. Sully, to punish the Sioux marauders of Minnesota. Took part in the battles at Whitestone Hills, and the Bad Lands, which about annihilated the red demons. Mr. Vest served three years in Dakota, on the Dakota and Yankton rivers, and has since resided, with the exception of one year, in Kansas. Has recently bought a good farm in Wabaunsee County, and will make it his home He was born in Lexington County, Ind., and his wife, formerly Susan Meeker, in Louisville, Ill. They have five children—one born in Lee County, Iowa, and all the others in Kansas.

MISSION CREEK TOWNSHIP.

BENJAMIN SAGE, farmer, P. O. Eskridge, is a native of Devonshire, England, where his father was largely engaged in farming. Mr. Sage came to America in 1871, and located in Michigan, near Niles, but sold out two years ago. He has 200 acres on Section 5, Township 1, Range 1; wheat yield good; has house, etc., well insured; his stock is not large, but very choice, he having some very fine Devon and Durham imported cattle. He has recently been joined by his younger brother. Neither of the gentlemen is married, the elder being a widower. Both are gentlemen of education, and are practical farmers.

M. R WADE, farmer, P. O. Eskridge, is a native of Shropshire, England, where he and his progenitors for many generations have been engaged in farming, and came here in 1875, locating on Section 15, Township 12, Range 12, where he has a fine farm and residence. His farm is well stocked, and his grounds and location good; wheat is average in yield with his neighbors. He has five children. He takes no heed of politics, but is a genial, whole-souled, typical John Bull; is a member of the Masonic body and of the English Church.

GEORGE H. YOUNKER, carpenter and farmer, residence three and one-half miles north of Eskridge; owns forty acres of land on Section 16, Township 13, Range 12—all under cultivation; came to Kansas in 1878, from Dearborn County, Ind., where he was born, April 27, 1854; resided there continuously until coming to Kansas; learned his trade near Aurora, Ind., but followed farming most of the time until coming to Kansas; is a member of Eminence Lodge, No. 225, A., F. & A. M., at Eskridge, Kan.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

ADAM KRATZER, farmer, southeast quarter Section 32, Township 11, Range 10, was born in the kingdom of Bavaria, Germany, July 4, 1834. He came to America in 1853, landing in New York on the 19th of January, remaining until his parents came, in 1854, when they removed to Iowa. In 1857 Mr. Kratzer removed to Kansas, and commenced work upon a farm. He purchased a piece of land for himself the next year. In 1859 his parents came to Kansas. Mr. Kratzer, however, suffered, in 1860, from bad crops, and went to Ohio to work for an uncle in a brewery. In October of the next year, he joined the Fifth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and was discharged May 5, 1863, on account of sickness. He has since been in ill health. He returned to Ohio and worked for his uncle until he returned to Kansas in 1864. He soon purchased the land upon which he now resides—southeast quarter Section 32, Township 11, Range 10. Mr. Kratzer is now in comfortable circumstances, and is the owner of considerable good stock. He has ten children—five boys and five girls, the oldest being nineteen years of age and the youngest eleven months. He is a member of the Lutheran Church.

CHARLES LEHMBERGH, farmer, P. O. Templin, was born in the Province of Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, in 1841, and received part of his education in Munich. He came to America in 1868, and, landing in New York, remained for a time in that city. He then went to Schenectady, N. Y., and engaged in business, until the spring of 1879, when he married and came to Kansas, locating for a few months in Leavenworth, and finally took up his present location, on Section 3, Township 2, Range 1, where he has a very nice little farm, and is rapidly getting it into a good state of cultivation. He is a member of the Lutheran Church.

MAPLE HILL TOWNSHIP.

OWEN RAFFERTY, farmer, owns 160 acres, Sections 22 and 27, two miles from Dover; has seventy acres under cultivation; came to Kansas in 1854, and settled in Doniphan County, near St. Joe, Mo., and participated in the early struggle of Kansas for the cause of liberty, under the leadership of old John Brown and Jim Lane. He was born in County Monghan, Ireland, in 1816, and when twenty-six years of age came to America, and settled in the West. While in Ireland he was engaged in the cattle business. He was married in 1859, at St. Joe, Mo., to Miss Margaret Hamlon, a native of Ireland; they have six children—William, Thomas, Baruey, Mary, Hattie and Rosa. He was disabled by a wound received in the right leg while in Capt. Kellogg's company of the Home Guards; was also a member of Loomis' Cavalry; is a member of the Catholic Church.

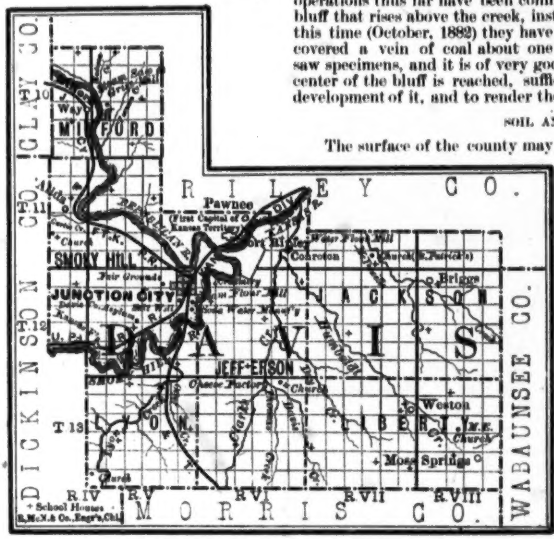
FARMER TOWNSHIP.

WILLIAM STRASCHEN, farmer, P. O. Alma, was born in 1836, in Hessen, Germany, and for many years followed the trade of millwright, both in his native land and this. He emigrated to America in 1866, and for several years resided in St. Louis, and for one year in St. Joe, Mo., working at his trade. Finally, in September, 1870, he came to Kansas, locating on the southeast quarter of Section 9, Township 1, Range 4, and subsequently purchasing 160 acres of Section 14. Only about ninety acres are under cultivation, with a yield of corn fifty, and wheat sixteen bushels to the acre. He has forty-seven head of cattle, seven horses and seventeen hogs. He was one of the first organizers of the Lutheran Church Society of Alma, of which Rev. H. C. Lenne is pastor, and is now trustee of same. He has never held any public office.

DAVIS COUNTY.

LOCATION, TOPOGRAPHY AND MINERAL RESOURCES.

DAVIS County is located in the third tier of counties from the northern boundary line of the State, and in the fifth tier west from the Missouri River. Were the township of Milford, and a small portion from the north of Smoky Hill Township taken from the county, its formation then would be almost square. Milford Township is a tract of land about six miles east and west, and nine miles north and south; that, jutting northward from the northwest corner of the county, projects, as it were, into Riley County, of which it was formerly a part. The map of Davis County bears a strong resemblance to the side wall of a church, with a spireless belfry built on top of the west corner, Milford Township representing the belfry. The county is bounded on the north by Riley County, on the south by Morris County, on the east by Wabaunsee County, and on the west by Dickinson County. Davis is a small county containing only 260,480 acres, or 400 square miles. It is divided into six civil townships, namely: Liberty, in the southeast; Jackson, in the northeast; Jefferson, in the center, running the whole length of the county, from north to south; Lyon, in the southwest; Milford, in the northwest, and Smoky Hill in the west, between Milford and Lyon.



The surface of the county is almost entirely prairie, only a little over three per cent. of it being timbered. The upland of the county stands in about the same relation to the bottom land as 80 to 20. The timber is confined exclusively to the margins of the rivers and creeks, the average width of the timber ranging from one-fourth to three-fourths of a mile. The timber consists of several varieties, which include white and burr oak, hackberry, black walnut, elm, cedar, sycamore, ash, hickory and cottonwood. The attention that has been given to artificial tree planting has been confined chiefly to shade and ornamental trees, although about 300 acres of artificial forest trees have been planted in different portions of the county, of various varieties. Taking the county altogether, not more than four per cent. of it, if quite this, is timber land. In the western portion of the county, the character of the prairie is rolling, its undulations being remarkable for their regularity and absence of those elevations which, in some places, are characterized as "bluffs" or "mounds." The eastern part of the county, however, is very broken and uneven, the uplands rising to such a height as to be termed bluffs. The valleys, or bottom lands, that lie along the course of the streams are not of uniform width, some being as narrow as one-fourth of a mile, while others reach to a width of two miles and over. The valleys of the Smoky Hill and Republican are very fine and exceedingly beautiful.

If anything related to the mineral kingdom lies hidden beneath the surface, it has not yet been discovered to any material extent. Several years ago, as has been mentioned elsewhere in this history, coal was bored for in the vicinity of Junction City, in the search for which, at a depth of 390 feet, a vein of salt brine was struck, of considerable strength. From this, some salt was made, but the making of it proving unprofitable, it was soon discontinued. A further boring, to the depth of about 800 feet, failed to find coal, but another vein of brine was struck, not as strong, however, as the one nearer the surface. Magnesian limestone, of the very best quality, is abundant in the county, and several very fine quarries have been opened. From these quarries considerable stone has been furnished for the new capitol at Topeka. Recently, however, some other parties have undertaken to find coal, with tolerably fair prospects of succeeding. The locality of the latter prospecting is on Humboldt Creek, in Jackson Township, about ten miles southeast from Junction City, on the farm of John T. Hobbs. The operations thus far have been confined to digging in from the face of the bluff that rises above the creek, instead of boring down from the top. At this time (October, 1882) they have gone in about fifty feet, and have discovered a vein of coal about one foot in thickness, of which the writer saw specimens, and it is of very good quality. It is expected that when the center of the bluff is reached, sufficient coal will be found to warrant the development of it, and to render the mining of it profitable.

SOIL AND STREAMS.

The surface of the county may be described as a high table-land of rolling prairie, whose altitude is set down as being 1,300 feet above the level of the sea. The soil is designated as "uplands" and "valleys." These valleys follow the courses of the streams, and vary in width. The soil in the valleys is alluvial, and is composed of decayed vegetable matter, a decomposition of other substances, to which has been added alkalies, generated by the ashes created by fires, that have for ages, until recently, swept over the surface, consuming the tall grasses and other vegetation, in its course, and the combinations of all these ingredients have made the soil extremely rich and fertile. The soil of these valleys may be said to be limitless in depth, and is capable of sustaining any and all kinds of vegetation. The soil of the uplands is also very fertile, although it does not extend to near the depth of that in the valleys. In many places, and this is especially the case in the eastern portion of the county, rock crops out from the surface, but in the other portions of the county, where the surface is more level and the undulations more gradual, there is an absence of this characteristic, and farming can be successfully followed. There are some splendid upland farms in the county, and those who cultivate them do so successfully. Experience has demonstrated the fact that the soil of both upland and lowland is well adapted to the cultivation and production of all kinds of cereal crops. There is no soil, in any country, better suited to the raising of wheat, oats, corn, barley, rye, and all other staple productions. Rich, nutritious grasses grow spontaneously from the soil, with great luxuriance and in immeasurable quantities, while tame grass, clover, timothy, hungarian, millet and blue grass can be cultivated with as much ease as though native to the soil. In a stock-raising country such as Kansas, an abundance of rich, nutritious grasses is an item of vast importance, and these, with an abundance of clear, pure water, make Davis County one of the finest grazing counties in the State.

There are very few sections of country better watered that the western portion of Davis County; and while the eastern half contains no stream of sufficient size which entitles it to be called a river, yet it is far from being destitute of water, as it is meandered by several very fine creeks. The Republican River enters the county at the northwest corner, and, after bending a little towards the east, runs due south about seven miles, when it forms a curve resembling a horse shoe, curving towards the west, after which its course is southeast, forming the boundary line between Smoky Hill and Milford Townships. It follows this course until it reaches Junction City, when it makes another bend and runs northward about three miles, where, taking another sudden turn, it resumes its southeastern course until it forms a junction with the Smoky Hill River, about two and a half miles northeast from Junction City. The Smoky Hill River enters the county from the west, and constitutes the dividing line between Lyon Township on the south, and Smoky Hill Township on the north. Its course is very serpentine until it reaches the west line of Jefferson township, from which point it runs north to Junction City, when it rounds towards the east, returning to form a confluence with the waters of the Republican. At the point of junction of the Republican and Smoky Hill, the Kansas River begins, which, flowing past Fort Riley, leaves the county at the northeast corner of Jefferson Township. The tribuiaries of the Republican are: Curtis Creek, that enters Milford Township from the west, and is about six miles long; Four Mile, whose course is southwest, five miles long; Timber Creek, running southwest, about ten miles long; Madison Creek and one or two smaller creeks. The Smoky Hill has only one tributary in the county, and that is Lyon Creek. This is an important creek, and has several lesser streams as feeders. The length of the creek is between thirty-five and forty miles, and enters the county from the south, about a mile east from the southwest corner. Its course for a few miles in Davis is due north, and then it verges toward the east, still keeping its northward tendency until it finds the waters of the Smoky Hill at the northeast corner of Lyon Township. Clark's Creek runs the entire length of the county from south to north, and as it travels its course, it receives the waters of Thomas Creek, Davis Creek, Dry Creek and Humboldt Creek, the latter being a stream about twenty miles long, which rises in the southeast corner of the county. From the point where the fork is formed by the junction of Humboldt with Clark's Creek, the latter becomes quite a stream, and turns the wheel of a grist-mill as it travels onward towards the Kansas River. McDowell's Creek runs in a northwesterly direction, across Jackson Township, and is some twenty-five miles long. Two or three diminutive streams are tributary to this creek. In addition to these water-courses there are some very fine springs in the county, and excellent well water can be obtained without much difficulty.

There is, probably, no county in the State that possesses superior watering privileges to Davis County. So far, these privileges have been very sparingly used. In the neighborhood of Junction City a water-power could be obtained capable of turning any amount of machinery, and setting millions of spindles in motion. How long is this immense power to remain idle? A person looking at the map will see that the Republican River flows from the northwest, and the Smoky Hill from the southwest, forming a junction at or near Junction City. The water in these rivers is permanent, even in the dryest seasons containing sufficient to run, if utilized, the heaviest kind of machinery. Now, were a canal, or race, cut from the Republican to the Smoky Hill, which could be accomplished without much difficulty, and at moderate expense, a water-power could be obtained capable of turning all the machinery that could be placed upon it. Some years ago a survey was made by one Daniel Mitchell, for a water-power canal between the two rivers, and his finding was as follows: By starting at Callen's corral, a short distance from Junction City, and following the slough, or marshy land in that vicinity, in a southeasterly direction for 1,600 feet, then southwest 2,250 feet, then northeast 2,110 feet, the Smoky Hill was reached. The total length of a canal following this line of survey would be 226 yards more than a mile, whereas, following a straight line from the starting point on the Republican to the terminating point on the Smoky Hill, the distance would be 127 yards less than a mile. At Callen's corral the Republican is 441½ feet wide, and the banks are sufficiently high to admit of the construction of a dam eight feet high. To cut such a canal the average depth of excavation required would be five feet, and the natural fall is very close upon nine feet, which could easily be increased to twelve feet by a dam across the Republican. Of the undeveloped water-power of Kansas, Mr. Josiah Copley says: "The Republican fork, as it used to be called, which unites with the Smoky Hill at Junction City, and together form the Kaw, is a large stream, with a strong flow at the driest season. At Junction City a fine power can be created by throwing the water of the Republican through a race of between one and two miles in length, across a nearly level plain, into the Smoky, giving a head of from twelve to twenty feet, as that stream descends from the northwest, down which there is an average descent of ten feet per mile. The water can be used over and over many times, affording thousands upon thousands of horse-power. I saw it at the close of the dry period of the present year, and found a volume of water sufficient for the heaviest works." While these two streams offer water privileges sufficient for all manufacturing enterprises, they are not the only privileges in the county by any means. Lyon Creek, Clark's Creek, and McDowell's Creek can all be utilized for milling purposes. The permanency of the streams in the county is attributable to the numerous springs by which they are fed. The best kind of water for domestic use, can be had anywhere in the county by sinking wells to the depth of from twenty to forty feet.

EARLY HISTORY.

It is not only supposed, but it is believed, that as far back as 1542, the territory now embraced in Davis County was visited by the Spanish explorer Francisco Vasquiz de Coronado. This is commencing a long way back, but the fact is set out in a map given in an article in the Smithsonian Report for 1869, prepared by Gen. J. H. Simpson, United States Army, in which the explorer's line of march is located through Davis County. Again, it is believed that a French explorer, named Dutisne, struck Davis County in his explorations, about 163 years ago, having arrived at the village of Pawnee on September 27, 1719. The account given of his explorations sets forth that here he found two Indian villages containing about 130 cabins each, and 250 warriors, who owned several hundred horses. It would seem that nearly all the western explorers were attracted to Davis County, because we find in the narrative of Gen. John C. Fremont's exploring expedition, that he crossed the Smoky Hill River in what is now Davis County, in June, 1843, and that he remained in the neighborhood several days.

We have now arrived at that period when it may be said the history of Davis County commences—1852, and from which it can be followed to a degree of considerable accuracy to the present time. In that year, Col. T. T. Fauntleroy of the First Dragoons, recommends the location and establishment of a fort at, or near, the mouth of the Republican River. In the fall of the same year a detachment of dragoons arrived at the site of the present fort, to which they gave the name of Camp Center. In the following spring Fort Riley was located, having been named after a distinguished general in the United States army. At that time it was supposed that the Kansas and Smoky Hill rivers were navigable, and a steamer named "Excel" had made several trips as far west as the Smoky, but this idea was soon abandoned. In 1854, settlers began to locate in the county, and to Thomas Reynolds is given the credit of being the first, he having settled near Ogden in June, 1854. It was in this year that Kansas became a Territory, and at that time there were not over twenty voters in all the territory now embraced in Davis County.

Under the territorial law, by which parties could form themselves into town companies and claim land for town sites, the Pawnee Town Association was organized in November, 1854, and, immediately after its formation, the town of Pawnee was located. The Association issued certificates of shares, which bore date November 26, 1854 signed by W. P. Montgomery, as president, and Wm. A. Hammond as secretary. Parties at that time connected with the army took quite a conspicuous part in the management of the affairs of the county (at that time there was no county organization), and thus we find the names of Gen. Lyon, Col. Montgomery, Maj. Ogden, and others, frequently mentioned in connection with transactions that go to make up the history of the county. Gen. Lyon, Col. Montgomery, and a few others connected with the army, were stockholders in the Pawnee Town Association.

The first election, held in what is now Davis County, was on the 29th day of November, 1854, at the house of Thomas Reynolds, near Ogden. The election was for a member of Congress for the ninth district. The Free-State candidate was R. P. Flenniken, and the Pro-slavery candidate was J. W. Whitfield. The judges of election were Lowe, Miles and Tombley, all members of the army. Forty votes were cast, of which Flenniken received thirty-one and Whitfield nine. The great object of the people in those days was to discover the head of navigation of the Kansas River, because no one doubted but that the river was navigable as far west as the confluence of the Republican and Smoky Hill. The Pawnee Town Association, thinking they had discovered the desired spot, began work on their town site in December, 1854. If this was to be the head of navigation, beyond which boats could not go, and where steamers would load and unload, it was necessary that a levee should be built, and, with commendable energy, the Association went to work and expended a great deal of time and money in its construction. The site chosen for the town of Pawnee was on the north side of the river, not far from Fort Riley. Some little trouble arose over the land claimed for the town site, as a number of settlers had already located thereon. Col. Montgomery, however, who was interested in the Association, with a squad of men drove the settlers off in January, 1855. Gov. Reeder, who was the first governor of the Territory, notified the Association that if they would have the necessary buildings completed, he would convene the first legislature at Pawnee. On March 6, 1855, was held the first public meeting in Pawnee, the president of the meeting being Robert Klotz. Among those who addressed the meeting was Gen. Nathaniel Lyon, afterwards killed at the battle of Wilson's Creek. The meeting passed strong resolutions in favor of a Free State. In the same month another town company was organized, of which an army surgeon named Wm. A. Hammond was president, and Gen. Lyon was secretary. J. R. McClure, who had settled upon a claim on Lyon Creek the year previous, was a member of the company. Certificates of stock were issued, and the town of Chetolah located. The place selected for the town site was a spot of elevated ground, north of McClure's claim, and near the mouth of Lyon Creek. About this time town-fever must have run high, for before the expiration of the month of March another company, known as the Ashland Company, made a settlement on McDowell's Creek, and laid out a town, to which they gave the name of Ashland. The town of Pawnee received quite an addition to its population during this month by the arrival of G. F. Gordon, M. Barry, A. Barry, I. P. Dickerson, and several others. At that time there were but two houses on the town site, but men were at work preparing for the commencement of the erection of the stone building designed for occupancy by the legislature. On the last day of March, 1855, occurred the first election for members of the Territorial House of Representatives and Council. Pawnee was the only voting precinct in what is now Davis County. The county formed part of the Eighth Representative District and Sixth Council District. For the Council, John Donaldson was the Pro-slavery candidate, and M. F. Conway the Free-State candidate. For representative, Russell Garrett was the Pro-slavery candidate, and S. D. Houston the Free-State. Seventy-five votes were polled, twenty-three Pro-slavery and fifty-three Free-State. In April another town company was organized, composed of A. Barry, S. D. Houston, B. E. Fullington, Moses Younkins and Frank Smith. This company located the town of Bacheller (since changed to Milford), on the east bank of the Republican, and about four miles south of the north line of Milford Township. In May the representatives of the Cincinnati Manhattan Company arrived at the site where Junction City now stands, and located a town, to which they gave the name of Millard. The parties who arrived were John Pipher, H. Palmer and A. J. Mead. Scarcely had they staked out the town, when they proceeded to elect a Mayor, and Pipher was chosen. In 1855 the Executive office was established at Pawnee, and in July of that year the first Territorial Legislature met at the same place. Unfortunately for the future of Davis County, a very dread and unwelcome visitor made its appearance at Fort Riley in that month. This was Asiatic cholera. At that time, in addition to the garrison, quite a large number of mechanics and other workmen were employed at the Fort, among whom the cholera made terrible ravages, carrying off for several days as many as one-eighth of the population. During its prevalence the mortality at the Fort reached as high as 175. The epidemic spread beyond the Fort, and reached Pawnee, where eight persons died from its attacks. The first case in Pawnee occurred on the 4th of July, when one Aaron Dutot was taken with it and died. This was a hard blow to the county, for the legislature that had just convened became terribly alarmed, and passed a bill for an adjournment of the session to Shawnee Manual Labor School, in Johnson County. The Governor vetoed the bill, but the Territorial Court sustained the measure, and Pawnee lost the capitol. The town of Island City was located in July, 1855, and a mile or two from this, in September, Riley City was located, both these towns having been located on the south side of the river. In September, 1855, the town of Pawnee was completely destroyed by the soldiers from Fort Riley, it having, by a change of the boundary lines, been brought within the limits of the military reservation. The legislature that convened in Johnson County in 1855, has passed into history as the "bogus legislature," and it was by that legislature that the eastern half of the State was divided into counties. The names given to the counties indicate the Pro-slavery proclivities of the majority of that body. Davis County was named after that Southern celebrity, who afterwards became the head and front of the rebellion for the destruction of the Union. That same year two additional voting precincts were created in the county, one at the town of Ashland, and one on Clark's Creek. In the legislature that convened at Topeka in March, 1856, Davis County was represented in the upper branch by J. H. Pillsbury, and in the lower branch by Abram Barry. In June of that year the government built a bridge across the Republican, a little way above the forks, but the winter that followed saw it washed away by high water. The first wheat raised in the county was in the summer of that year on a patch of ground containing two acres, on Humboldt Creek. It was raised by a man named Spencer, and was sold to G. K. Harris, who hauled it to Topeka, a distance of seventy-five miles, to be ground. In June, 1856, a party of Cincinnati speculators organized themselves into a company known as the "Cincinnati and Kansas Manufacturing Company," and located the town of Millard. J. McArthur, of Cincinnati, was president of the company, and D. Wilson, of Millard, K. T., was agent of the company. Millard was laid out on the identical land on which Junction City now stands, but it was soon abandoned, not, however, until the schemers who had embarked on the plan of establishing a bogus town had realized thousands of dollars from the sale of lots, to which they had, and could give, no title. The nearest Millard came to being a town was the building of one house, which was afterwards attached and sold. The notable event in October, 1856, was a visit made to Fort Riley by the Governor of the Territory, John W. Geary. He had, as an escort, a company of dragoons under command of Maj. Sibley. Coming from the South, he crossed the river at Riley City, by ferry, to Pawnee. Riley City at that time contained eight houses and Pawnee two. In fact, Pawnee, after having been destroyed by the troops in 1855, lost its identity as a town, except in name. In this same month a party led by P. B. Plumb, afterwards Col. Plumb, and now a U. S. Senator from Kansas, arrived at what is now Junction City, in quest of a place to locate. A. C. Pierce, one of the company, insisted on what had been known as Millard as being the place to establish themselves; but Plumb not agreeing, they went further west and located the town of Mariposa, in Saline County. The town they created was soon abandoned, and the party dissolved, Plumb going to Emporia, and Pierce to what is now Junction City. At that time Davis County was not organized as a county, but was attached to other territory in a district, in which it bore the character of a municipal township.

The legislature of 1857 made provision for the organization of Davis County into a separate and distinct corporation, and appointed three commissioners, the chairman of whom was to be ex officio probate judge, and a sheriff, who were to hold office until the first Monday in October. The board thus appointed met and held its first meeting at Riley City, on March 16, 1857, at which were present as commissioners Robert Reynolds and C. L. Sanford. Provision was also made at the same session of the legislature for an election to be held on the first Monday in October, 1857, for the permanent location of the county-seat of Davis County. About this time application was made by several officers at Fort Riley, and a number of citizens, for a dispensation to form a lodge of Masons, to be known as "Union Lodge."

In the summer of 1857 another town company was organized by Thomas Reynolds, A. J. Mead, J. R. McClure, Robert Wilson and Abram Barry. This company started a town, or rather selected a site, to which they gave the name of Humboldt. The object of the organizers was to locate their town on the abandoned town site of Millard, but their enterprise proved an utter failure. In September of 1857 we find another town company organized under the name of the "Kansas Falls Town Company." This company located a town on the Smoky Hill River, about seven miles southwest from Junction City, and almost on the western boundary line of the county. In that year Pawnee disappeared as a voting precinct, and at the election on October 5, for members of the legislature under the Lecompton constitution, the voting precincts in the county were Ashland, Ogden, Chetolah, Clark's Creek, Riley City and Montague's. At that election Davis County polled 126 Free-State votes and 30 Democratic. In the fall of 1857 the Junction City Town Company was incorporated, with J. R. McClure as president, Daniel Mitchell secretary, and Robert Wilson treasurer. The survey of the town site was begun in the latter end of December, and finished in the summer of 1858. In April of this year another town company was organized, by which a town named Cedar Point was located on Clark's Creek. A. J. Baker was president of this company, and E. Davis secretary. Work on the first building in Junction City was commenced in May, which was erected near the intersection of Washington and Seventh streets. The first sermon preached in the town was by Rev. W. Millice, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who held service in the month of July, in a frame building on the northeast corner of Seventh and Washington streets. In the same month Union Lodge A. F. & A. M. was established in the town, the first meetings of which were held in a roughly constructed log cabin. The legislature that convered in 1859, located the county-seat of Davis County at Ashland, on McDowell's Creek. In June, 1859, Junction City was visited by Horace Greeley, who delivered a lecture to the citizens. In the summer of 1859 a contest arose between the Junction City Town Company and the Millard Company over the land embraced in the town site, each claiming it by virtue of its organization and location. In the fall of 1857 a U. S. land office had been established at Ogden, and it was here the contest over the town site was heard. The hearing of the case continued through six weeks, after which it was submitted to the authorities at Washington for final decision, which resulted in favor of the Junction City Company. In March, 1860, the board of commissioners made Junction City a voting precinct.

In accordance with a petition presented to the board of commissioners asking for a change in the location of the countys eat, which was at that time at Ashland, the question was submitted to the people, and an election ordered to be held on June 25, 1860. The contesting places were Junction City, Union, Ashland, and Riley City. Great interest was manifested in the canvass, Junction City and Union being the two chief competitive points. On June 29, the vote was canvassed by the commissioners, the result being, 287 for Junction City, 129 for Union, 8 for Ashland, and 3 for Riley City. Junction City was victorious, and became the seat of justice for the county, which it still remains, and the first meeting of the county commissioners at that place was held on July 2, 1860. Prior to 1861, there was no contract for carrying the mail farther west than Junction City, but in April of that year a contract was let to one Samuel Orr, for carrying the mail once a week from Junction City to Salina, a distance of about forty-five miles. The first mail that started from Junction City to Fort Larned, a distance of about 150 miles, was June 20, 1861, the carriers being, S. Orr, and P. E. Weston. The extent of the mail that trip was one solitary letter. The facts connected with the history of the county in 1861, relate chiefly to army matters. There was enlisting, and mustering, and meetings, and speeches, and uniforming, and arming, and equipping, and fifing, and drumming, and cheering, and departing, and a regular hurrahing for the Union all the year round. On December 12, 1861, a daily mail commenced to run between Junction City and Leavenworth. On March 10, 1862, the soldiers stationed at Fort Riley, came to the conclusion that the editor of the Kansas Frontier conducted his paper more in favor of secession than the Union, and that his sentiments as expressed therein, were rather disloyal than loyal in tone, and becoming impatient at being kept in a state of inactivity, and, probably, with a view to show how they would act when called upon, charged upon the office of the Frontier, and captured it by storm, doing great damage to the property. Some of the citizens, not liking this manner of dealing with a private citizen's property, held a meeting the following day in Taylor's Hall, and denounced the action of the soldiers. The meeting was not of the most orderly kind, and quite a boisterous time was had over a resolution introduced to the effect that the paper was loyal, and asking the meeting to indorse it as such. Whether it was the proceedings had at this meeting, or something said by the editor of the Frontier that further aroused the indignation of the soldiers is not known, but a few evenings after, on Saturday evening of the same week, they made another attack upon the office and utterly demolished it, and in so doing they wounded a man named C. A. Wood, from the effects of which he shortly afterwards died. On Sunday, April 20, 1862, quite a little excitement was created in Junction City, over a shooting affair which some soldiers engaged in, while in one of the saloons in Junction City. At that time there were several regiments encamped in and about Fort Riley, and among them the Twelfth and Thirteenth Wisconsin, and the First and Seventh Kansas. The outbreaks of the soldiers while in town, became so frequent, and such a source of annoyance, not to say danger, to the people, that it was found necessary to place the town under charge of Capt. Sylvester of the Twelfth Wisconsin, with Company K., who acted as a provost-guard. Capt. Sylvester has the reputation of having been very rough on saloons, and whether by his orders, or the orders of some one else, thirteen barrels of whisky were broken open and spilled on the 6th day of May, 1862, at a place named Island City, on the opposite bank of the river from where Pawnee once stood. This place took its name from the fact that it was located on a piece of land, which, in some seasons, would be entirely surrounded by water, owing to a slough or strip of low, wet land, by which it was encompassed. At the extreme west point of this island, so called, some parties had once undertaken to build a town to which they gave the name of West Point; but the town never had an existence outside the imagination of its would-be founders. The name of the place was afterwards changed to Whisky Point, it having derived this name from somebody in court having said he would rather die in Junction City than live at Whisky Point, referring by this remark to West Point. Since that time the place has been known by the name of Whisky Point.

On May 14, 1862, a very unpleasant affair occurred at Whisky Point, between a party of soldiers, in which two were killed and one wounded. On the same day the provost-marshal, with a squad of men, went around and closed up every saloon in which intoxicating liquors were vended. In that same month considerable excitement was created, not only in Davis County, but in those adjacent, from the fact that a body of Comanche Indians had entered the Republican Valley and were driving off the settlers, and committing other depredations. Of course, owing to the large number of troops in and around Fort Riley, the people within easy distance of that place had not much to fear, but among those farther west great consternation prevailed, and Junction City was sought by many as a place of safety. The first stage coach that left Junction City for the far West was on August 4, 1862, which was considered quite an event in the history of the county, as it was the formal opening of the Smoky Hill route to Santa Fe. Prior to that time all the travel had been over the Santa Fe trail which passed through Morris County to the south of Davis. Five days later, the first stage from the West arrived in town. On the 17th day of September, the whole frontier was thrown into a state of feverish excitement by a band of bushwhackers, who made a dash through the country and raided Salina, doing just what they pleased and carrying everything with a high hand. Although the people of Davis County were comparatively safe from such incursions, yet in those unsettled times of trouble and danger, there was no telling what might happen, and to guard against surprises, guards were posted every night around Junction City, so that timely warning might be given to the inhabitants upon the first appearance of the approach of an enemy. This system of night guarding was kept up for several weeks, when it was discontinued. On the 23rd day of March 1863, the people of Junction City had a visitor that filled them with as much alarm, and caused them to move as lively as if they had been invaded by both Comanches and bushwhackers combined. They might shoot off savages and guerrillas, but what they had to contend against now was not to be frightened away with bullets. On that day the whole town was startled by the cry that a terrible prairie fire was approaching, which threatened the town. Immediately everybody was on the alert, men, women and boys, to fight the fire, some with mops, some with brooms, and some with whatever they could get to beat out the flames. The fire swept over the uninhabited portion of the town site, but the town itself received little, if any, injury. On the 12th day of May, 1863, a deplorable affair occurred on the Smoky Hill River, about two or three miles south of Junction City. Some time previous to the occurrence, two brothers, Paul and Henry Kramer, had located and settled on the scene of the quarrel. On this particular day, a dispute arose between the brothers over some trifling matter, in which Henry became so incensed that he attempted to kill his brother Paul, but failing in the attempt, he there and then committed suicide by cutting his own throat. The summer of 1863 was exceedingly wet, and a vast amount of the wheat crop of Davis County was completely destroyed, because sufficient help could not be procured to secure it. It may be worth mentioning here as indicative of how the county abounded in game and other wild animals, that one man, during the month of September, 1863, killed, in his own neighborhood, 660 prairie chickens, 50 geese, 260 ducks, 20 skunks, 6 wolves, 3 badgers, and 6 raccoons.

A desire had long existed among the people to have the name of the county changed from Davis to one more agreeable to the Union sentiment of the county. They did not like the idea of their county having been named after Jeff Davis, who was at that time President of the Confederacy and commander-in-chief of the Rebel army. Two years prior, an effort had been made to have the name changed from Davis to Lyon, in honor of General Lyon, who was killed at Wilson's Creek, and who had taken quite a part in the early settlement of the county. Failing in this, they made another effort in 1864 to have it changed to Lincoln, but in this also, they failed, and so it is that Davis County retains the name of the individual who was placed at the head of the rebellion for the destruction of the Union.

The winter of 1863–'64 was quite a severe one, and a great amount of snow fell; in some places the ground was covered to the depth of eighteen inches, rendering travel extremely difficult, and very often stopping it altogether. Travel was so retarded that settlers on Clark's Creek received no mail for six successive weeks. The first draft for the army was ordered on March 10, 1864, of which Davis County was required to furnish fourteen men. In September, 1864, the Rebel General Price made a raid through Kansas, and in order to give him a warm reception when he struck Davis County, business was completely suspended and great activity prevailed among army men. The Fifteenth Regiment, which had been chiefly recruited in Davis and adjoining counties, was at that time, encamped on the Republican River near the place where the present bridges cross that river, and all the militia were in camp. Price did not come, however, and after a suspension of about three weeks, business resumed its ordinary channels. In May, 1865, D. A. Butterfield organized the Butterfield Overland Dispatch Company, and proposed to open up the Smoky Hill route to Denver, and on June 25, the construction train of the company arrived at Junction City, from which point they started West on July 3, and arrived in Denver on the seventh day of August. In September the coaches of the company began making tri-weekly trips from Junction City to Denver, and in the following month one of the coaches was attacked by Indians, near Cow Creek, and burned. In September, quite an excitement was created over the arrest of two strangers who were charged with horse stealing. Sheriff Purinton had them in his charge at the Eagle Hotel in Junction City, but the place was surrounded by a mob, some of whom entered the hotel and took the prisoners away from the sheriff, after which they carried them to the saw-mill on the Smoky, where the two men, guilty or innocent, were hung. In January 1866, a great excitement was created in Junction City over a very little matter. The cause of all this excitement was a little four-year-old colored child, who made its appearance in the public school. This was something not to be borne, and the people rose in their wrath against such an outrage. The school at that time was held in the upper story of a two-story stone building located on Sixth street. The people were not all one-sided in regard to turning the little colored child out of school, and the fact that a colored child desired to be educated ought not to have caused grown people to lose their heads. The wrath of the people was shortly allayed, however, for on the 18th day of January, 1866, the building in which the school was held, was burned down, some say by accident, some say otherwise, but no matter how it happened the school was brought to a close. At that time, although Junction City was the county-seat, it was without a county building, and the several county officers held their various offices in the upper story of a two story stone building that stood at the corner of Sixth and Washington streets. On the night of April 8, this building was totally destroyed by fire, and two or three days afterward a fearful hurricane swept over the county, doing a great deal of damage to property both in the town and country.

The Smoky Hill route to Santa Fe having now been opened, the first coach from that point arrived at Junction City on June 29, 1866. The first through mail for Santa Fe over the Smoky Hill route, left Junction City on July 2, 1866. It was a tri-weekly, and the time for the through trip as per time-card was fourteen days. On the 5th of July, the county commissioners having decided that a bridge across the Smoky, in the vicinity of Fogarty's mill, was necessary, authorized the sale of bonds for the building of the bridge to the amount of $20,000.

The year 1867 was remarkable only for the wonderful improvement made in Junction City, the great interest taken in railroad matters, as manifested by the numerous meetings that were held, and the voting of a large amount of bonds to aid in the construction of the U. P. Railway, Southern Branch, bitter contests over the building of bridges across the Republican and Smoky Hill rivers, and the large influx of immigration. The completion of the K. P. railway through Davis County, and the establishing of a tri-weekly line of mail coaches between Junction City and Santa Fe, made 1867 a very prosperous year for the county. Railway and other magnates from New York, Boston, Philadelphia and St Louis visited Junction City in the course of the year.

Nothing of a very interesting character occurred during 1868, the chief topic that interested the people at that time being the construction of the U. P. Railway, Southern Branch. There was a transaction, however, that occurred in the bank of Hale & Rice, at Junction City, that gave rise to a great deal of talk and a good deal of speculation. One, W. C. Rawalle, had deposited $15,000 in the bank, which, on the 26th of March was stolen from the safe. How was it stolen? Who stole it? These were questions frequently asked, but while some "guessed," and some "suspected," and some "calculated," and others "surmised," and some whispered that it looked a little "suspicious," yet how it was stolen, or who stole it, none seemed to know. Rawalle sued the bank to recover the amount, but after being in the court for over two years, the suit was decided against him. About this time the farming community was greatly excited over the introduction of Texas cattle into the county, and several meetings were held in different portions of the county to organize resistance to their entering Davis County. A strip of land about a mile wide, between the Smoky Hill and Republican rivers, at their point of junction with the Kaw, and which was formerly part of the Military Reservation land, became an object of dispute between the U. P. R. R. Co., and the Republican River Bridge Company. Both companies claimed the land, and the railway company had included it in their addition to Junction City. The River Bridge Company brought suit to enjoin the railway company from selling lots in this addition, which was eventually decided against the Bridge Company. In the early part of December, 1868, quite a heavy snow fell, which greatly impeded travel. The snow drifted so fearfully that there was no communication either east or west from Junction City for the space of a week. In this month, the U. P. Southern Branch began to assume tangible shape, and the contractors advertised for ties, and twelve miles of the road were located south of town. The old year went out with a rain that commenced on the 30th of December, and continued until about noon on New Year's day, when it turned into a severe snow storm.

For a long time the county had been infested by a gang of horse thieves to the great annoyance of the settlers. Scarcely a week passed but a settler, somewhere in the county, would have one or more horses stolen. To-night the thieves would operate on Humboldt Creek, to-morrow night on Lyon's Creek, and so they would change their field of operations at each theft. It began to be suspected that such a systematic method of horse stealing was not carried on by transient thieves, and suspicion settled strongly down upon a party that were located at intervals over the county. Among the suspected party was one Thomas Reynolds, who, on the morning of August 22, 1868, was found hanging to a tree lifeless. It never became satisfactorily known who did the hanging, but the supposition was, and is, that it was done by the balance of the gang who entertained great fears that Reynolds was going to betray them. A coroner's jury labored for three months to ascertain how Reynolds came to his death, and finally concluded that he met his death at the hands of persons to them unknown.

To avoid all further trouble on account of black and white children attending the same school in Junction City, a separate school was opened for colored children on the 14th day of September, 1868. For the two or three years following the completion of the K. P. Railway to Junction City, that point seemed to be the center of attraction for people seeking business locations in the West. So rapidly had it increased in growth, that, at the general election in 1869, the vote of the town was more than half of that cast in the entire county. The most remarkable feature in the history of the county for that year, was the great flood, which occurred on the 24th day of June. The rain commenced to fall between five and six o'clock in the evening, and for about the space of half an hour, the water came down, not only in torrents, but in sheets, like the waters of a mighty cataract. Towards nine o'clock it began again, but not with such terrible force, but what it lacked in force it made up in time, as it rained incessantly until the following morning. The rise in the creeks and rivers was sudden and great. The Republican and Smoky Hill overflowed their banks. Powerless to resist the rushing flood, bridges were swept away as if they were feathers; a large portion of the railroad track was destroyed, and a vast amount of other property was either totally destroyed or seriously injured. Nor was the loss confined entirely to property, as thirteen lives were lost by the flood on Chapman's Creek, which enters the Smoky about a mile west of Davis County. Neither before that time, so far as known, nor since, has the region of country about Davis County been visited by such a flood. The Smoky Hill River rose ten feet higher than any point to which it had reached before that time. In that same year quite a sad event occurred on Davis Creek, in Jefferson Township. Two children whose parents resided close to the creek, while out gathering the first flowers of spring, got so far from home that they lost their way. One was eight and the other six years old. The little things wandered on not knowing which way to turn. Darkness set in, but the little wanderers did not return. Alarm was spread throughout the neighborhood, and the settlers for miles around turned out to search for the missing children. Morning came and still they were not found. The search went on, and was continued throughout the second day and the second night, but no trace was found to lead to the discovery of the lost ones. How far their little feet wandered, or how much they suffered will never be known. The people kept up the search, and on the third day the missing ones were found about a mile from home, but their wanderings had ceased. Their little tired feet would wander no more, for side by side, firmly locked in death they lay, embraced in each others' arms.

The business of Junction City had grown immensely within a few years and the transactions of 1869 eclipsed those of any previous year, as will be seen from the following figures:

Pounds of local freight received,	37,697,167
Pounds of freight shipped,	9,470,925
Cash paid for local freight,		$ 188,410
Gross sales of merchandise,		1,575,000
Cash deposited in banks,		3,174,500
Eastern exchange sold,		1,985,000
Cash paid over bank counters,		6,345,000

These figures would indicate that at the close of 1869, Junction City was in a very flourishing condition. The following year was one in which many improvements were made in the county, and railroads projected to almost every corner of the State, and to a great many places out of the State. It would seem that the people were wild on railroad schemes, and several meetings were held in the interest of as many different routes. In 1867, the county had voted $165,000 in bonds to aid in the construction of what is now known as the M., K. & T. Railway, but for some cause or other the bonds never got into the hands of the company. To recover these bonds, and interest on the same from November 1, 1869, the company brought suit against the county in May, 1870, and after the case had been fought to a final decision in the Supreme Court, it was decided in favor of the county. In that year also, the legislature authorized the county to invest in a poor-farm, and the county commissioners acting in accordance therewith, did in the month of December purchase a farm and erect a poor-house. Since the completion of the K. P. Railway to Junction City in 1866, that place had been the terminus of the first division of the road, which fact added greatly to the business of the town, but in April 1870, the division was changed from Junction City to Wamego, a point about thirty-five miles east, in Pottawatomie County. The Smoky Hill mills which had been previously destroyed by the flood, were rebuilt this year by Henry Panton. Towards the latter end of the year, deer were quite plenty in the county, and, one day in December, thirteen were killed within a mile of Junction City.

In August, 1870, one Sanderson, who lived a little way from Junction City, suspected of being connected with a gang of horse thieves, and of having committed several and divers other offenses, was arrested and placed in custody. According to law, his preliminary examination should have taken place in Junction City, but instead of this he was handcuffed and taken in an omnibus to Jackson Township, for the ostensible purpose of having an examination. He went under charge of the sheriff and a guard of six men. Arriving at the place of examination, no Justice of the Peace could be found, and several hours must elapse before this functionary could put in an appearance. In the meantime, news soon spread far and wide that Sanderson was there, and in a short time a mob gathered and demanded his surrender by the sheriff. The sheriff, like a brave, magnanimous officer, deserted his prisoner, and told him to defend himself as best he could. Defend himself! How could the unfortunate man defend himself against a howling mob with a pair of handcuffs on his wrists, and without a weapon in his hands? He ran and got into the omnibus, several shots being fired at him as he entered. When Sanderson entered the 'bus, there was a portly gentleman sitting in it, named John Gross, who had gone over as one of the guards. Now, Mr. Gross was not used to having lumps of lead flying through the air in close proximity to his cranium, and when he heard the bullets go whiz-hiss-buz, he thought it was full time to make himself scarce, and, notwithstanding his 225 avoirdupois, he managed to scramble through the omnibus window in a hurry. To this day he cannot tell how he ever succeeded in doing it. Sanderson, seeing the thirsters for his blood coming after him, jumped from the omnibus and started for the timber; but two or three men pursued him on horseback and shot him as he was running, killing the unfortunate man while he was manacled. Having dispatched him, they next turned their attention to two brothers of Sanderson who had accompained him from Junction City. To these they gave ten minutes in which to prepare their wills, but for some cause or other they changed their minds and gave them so many hours in which to leave the county. They both left. One of them never returned, but the other one did, and is now respected as a good neighbor and an honest farmer.

The year 1871 commenced by the county commissioners paying to McClure & Humphrey, and Shannon & Shannon, $6,000 for services in the railway bond suit. In laying out the town of Junction City, a very beautiful piece of ground was set outside for park purposes, and a very elegant park it is, with fine walks and handsome shade trees. This delightful patch of ground took the eye of a party named Hynes, who thought it would be a magnificent place for a residence, which, in reality, it would. An idea entered Hyne's head that the "claim" could be successfully "jumped," owing to some real, or supposed, flaw he had discovered in the title, and acting on this discovery, he "jumped," and commenced the erection of a building in the park. When he had got this far, he was "jumped," and fined $50 for trespass. Out of this grew various law-suits between the city and Hynes as to the ownership of the park, and it is to be presumed they resulted unfavorably to Hynes, as the city still holds the ground for park purposes. January 1871, was an exceedingly cold month, and a great deal of snow fell. The mercury was as low as 15 degrees below zero.

In March a murder was committed on Clark's Creek, a man by the name of John S. Evans, having been murderered by one Mansel Cuppy. The murderer was afterwards convicted and sent to the penitentiary. Quite a fire broke out in Junction City on June 23, 1871, and before it could be extinguished several buildings on the northwest corner of Seventh and Washington streets were destroyed. July was a month of railroad excitement, and three propositions were submitted to the people. One was for $150,000 to the Kansas & Nebraska Company; another was for $100,000 to the Junction City & Fort Kearney, and the third was for $100,000 to the Holden Branch, or to the Lawrence, Topeka, & Junction City Railway. Men went out all over the county canvassing in favor of the bonds, while others filled columns of the Union on the same subject. The election on the bonds was held on the 3rd day of September, 1871, and every one of the propositions carried by majorities as follows: 441, 455, 431. The year 1872 was ushered in with no abatement in the railroad fever. In February, the county commissioners submitted a proposition for an additional $100,000 for the Junction City & Fort Kearney Railway, which was voted upon April 2, and carried by 357 majority. In May, the First National Bank was established in Junction City, with Robert McBratney as president, and James Streator cashier. The last half of 1871, and the first six months of 1872, witnessed a large influx of people to the county. Not less than 150 new farms were opened in the county in twelve months. The country now receives more settlers than the town, and the number is rapidly increasing. At the general election in November, 1870, the vote of Junction City, was seventy-seven more than half of the entire vote of the county, whereas in 1872, it was eighty-seven less than half the vote. This was also a great year for crops, the corn crop all over the county averaging nearly seventy bushels to the acre.

The legislature of 1873 made a change in the boundary lines of Davis County, by which Ashland Township was taken from Davis, and added to Riley County, and Milford Township was taken from Riley and annexed to Davis County. One of the first settlers in the county, Abram Barry, a citizen very highly respected, and who had occupied several honorable positions to which he had been chosen by the people, met his death by accidental drowning in Madison Creek on May 4, 1873. On the 12th day of June 1873, a colored man named Hilliard Morrow, killed a man named Overbee on Fifth street in Junction City. He was tried in June and found guilty of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to be hung. This was the first sentence of death pronounced in the county. The sentence was afterwards commuted to imprisonment for life. The county jail was completed and ready for occupancy in September, 1873. In November, a very destructive prairie fire swept over the country in the vicinity of Humboldt Creek, doing immense damage and entailing heavy losses upon the settlers. In April 1874, the farm house and out-buildings of Joseph Beavers, located on Humboldt Creek, were swept out of existence by fire. In the same month a very destructive fire occurred in Junction City, by which the "Hale House," "Brown's Hall," and eight other buildings were utterly ruined. In 1873, a party commenced boring for coal in the vicinity of Junction City, but instead of finding coal, they struck, at a depth of about 290 feet, a vein of highly impregnated salt brine, a sample of which was sent to the Smithsonian Institute for analyzation. The analyzation was made in 1874, the result of which was that one gallon of the brine made three and a half pounds of salt. In August, 1874, Junction City was visited by another fire, which destroyed the "Illinois House" and a number of stables. In December 1874, Mr. Fogarty completed his dam across the Smoky Hill River. This was the year of the great grasshopper raid, by which Davis County, like every other county in the State, was completely ravaged. Crops were utterly destroyed, and a great many of her people were thrown into a state of destitution. A few becoming discouraged, left the State, but the great majority remained, and while many suffered from the want of actual necessities, they met their adversity bravely, and in a year or two were again on the road to prosperity. As everything was destroyed, the people had to be aided from outside sources, and early in 1875, the County Commissioners and the Ladies' Aid Society began to distribute aid to relieve the distressed. The number of persons in the county rendered destitute by the grasshopper raid was 1,154. If the crops in 1874 were destroyed, it would seem that the people were fully compensated by the abundant crops the following year, the wheat crop ranging from twenty-five to as high as forty-five bushels per acre, so that the first year after the grasshopper calamity, the farmers were in a condition not only to supply their own wants, but to ship immense quantities of grain to feed others. In January, 1876, the County Commissioners ordered a herd law, to go into effect on the 19th day of the following month. This herd law had been a bone of contention in the county for a long time, and each time the question had been submitted to a vote of the people it had been defeated. Finally the law was changed so that county commissioners in their respective counties could establish a herd law, and although the commissioners had been repeatedly urged by petition and otherwise, to declare a herd law, they persistently refused to do so until January 1876, when one was declared. Since then the county has gone on steadily improving and growing in wealth, without any incidents transpiring of historical interest. Each year brings its quota of new settlers, and sees new farms opened up, and each year adds to the people's happiness, comfort and prosperity.

In the summer of 1881, however, the northern portion of the county in the vicinity of Fort Riley, was visited by a cyclone that did considerable damage, but chiefly to the barracks and stables at the Fort. The barracks were in great part unroofed, and several men were killed by falling stones and timber. One stable was blown down in which there were thirty horses, and, however strange it may seem, only one of the number was killed. Some of the others were pretty badly bruised, and they were all so tightly wedged in between stones, timber, and debris, that they had to be dug out.

There is a place close to Junction City, which it is currently believed was a fortified place long, long, long ago, before gunpowder was invented or cannon thought of. The place is known as the "old fortification," and considerable local interest is attached to it. In shape, it bears some resemblance to that of a fort, and the fact that a number of flint arrow heads, and other ancient warlike missiles and weapons have been found upon the premises, establishes the belief in its antiquity.

There is still standing on the old town-site of Pawnee, a monument to the early days of Davis County. This is the old stone building, erected in 1855, and in which the first Territorial Legislature convened in July of that year. The old building still stands, but is used for other and different purposes than those for which it was originally intended. Through one gable end there is a considerable hole, which, some say, was made by cannon at the time the military from Fort Riley razed the town in December, 1855. Some give no credence to this statement, but the burden of testimony goes to prove that the hole was originally made by a shot from a field howitzer, and since that time has been considerably enlarged. Judge G. F. Gordon, one of the first settlers of Davis County, says that the hole was left by workmen, through which to convey timbers; that he was there at the construction of the building, and assisted in putting the timbers through the hole. He further says that the razing of the town by the military is a myth—not a shot was fired. When Jeff Davis was Secretary of War, the boundaries of the Fort Riley Military Reservation were extended so as to take in the town site of Pawnee City. When the order to vacate the town was given by the military, it was quickly obeyed by the settlers, and the romantic story of the hole made by a cannon ball is exploded. Most people prefer, however, to believe the story of the cannon ball, romantic as it is, rather than the cold truth of history.

The first commissioners of the county were Robert Reynolds, C. L. Sandford and N. B. White, and the first meeting held by the board was at Riley City, on the 16th day of March 1857. The commissioners present at this meeting were: Robert Reynolds and C. L. Sandford. G. F. Gordon was appointed clerk pro tem, but E. L. Pattee was the first regularly appointed clerk. H. N. Williams was appointed sheriff, and was the first man in the county who held that office. P. M. Barclay was the first treasurer of the county, and G. F. Gordon was the first Justice of the Peace. The first post-office in the county was established at Fort Riley in 1853, with Robert Wilson as postmaster. The first death in the county was that of Aaron Dutot, who died from cholera on the 4th day of July, 1855. The first marriage in the county was that of Thomas Jenkins and Ella Wicks, which took place October 1, 1855. The first birth in the county, was that of John Fleming, December 20, 1854. The first merchant in the county, was John T. Price, who opened a grocery store at Pawnee in 1854. The first instrument recorded in the county, as shown by the books in the office of Register of Deeds, was a chattel mortgage covering four yoke of oxen, two mules, four cows, and five calves, which was given by Hanson N. Williams to David Clarkson, to secure the payment of a note for $200, the date of the instrument being March 17, 1857.

ORGANIZATION OF TOWNSHIPS.

Prior to the 7th day of August, 1872, Davis County constituted but one township. The board of County Commissioners on that date divided the county into two civil townships, to which they gave the names of "Smoky Hill" and "Jackson." Smoky Hill embraced all the territory in the county lying west of the east line of Range 5, and Jackson included all that portion of the county lying east of that line.

Milford Township.—This township was transferred from Riley to Davis County by act of the Legislature in 1873. This is the northwest township of the county. Its first settlers were Abram Barry, Marshall Barry and George Taylor, who settled in the township in 1855. The first school district was organized at Bachelier (now Milford) in 1859. In that year also, Clarke, Pierce and Bryan erected a saw-mill, and the first store in the township was opened by F. B. Smith at Bacheller in 1859. The first postoffice in the township was established in 1861, and named Bacheller, the building used for the office being the log cabin of Abram Barry, on Madison Creek, who was the first postmaster. The first marriage in the township was that of Albert Avery and Calista Whittemore in 1858. The first child born was Thomas J. Bartell, the date of his birth being September 17, 1859.

Smoky Hill Township.—This township was organized August 7, 1872. The first settler in the township was Thomas Reynolds, who settled there in 1853. The township embraces all that portion of the county lying between the Republican and Smoky Hill rivers from their point of junction to the west line of the county. Fort Riley is within the limits of this township. It was also in this township that the old town of Pawnee was situated, the founders of which were Col. Montgomery, U. S. A.; Surgeon W. A. Hammond, U. S. A ; Capt. Nathaniel Lyon, U. S. A.; Robert Wilson, Post Sutler, and Robert Klotz. The town was founded in the fall of the year 1854, but was destroyed by the military in 1855, owing to its being located on the military reservation. In 1854, J. R. McClure located at Pawnee, followed in March, 1855, by G. F. Gordon and Abram and Marshal Barry. A family by name of Fleming also resided in the township in 1854, as to this family is accredited the birth of the first child, which was born on December 20, 1854, and to which was given the name of John. The first merchant in the township was John T. Price, who established a grocery store at Pawnee in 1854. The first couple married in the township were Thomas Jenkins and Ella Wicks, October 1, 1855. The first postoffice was established at Fort Riley in 1853, with Robert Wilson as postmaster.

Jackson Township was named after General Andrew Jackson, and was created on the 7th day of August, 1872. When first organized it comprised more than half the territory of the county, but by subsequent subdivisions it has been brought down to its present dimensions, and now comprises only the northeast portion of the county. Among the first settlers in the township were Charles and John Briggs, with their mother, Catherine Briggs; C. M. Barclay, W. D. Poole, T. Donovan and John Westover, all of whom settled in the township from 1854 to 1856. The first settlements were made along McDowell's Creek, on account of the timber that skirts the stream. The first schoolhouse built in the township was in 1863, and Miss Ayers was the teacher. The first marriage in the township was that of James Tully and Ruth Briggs, in 1861. The first death was that of Mrs. McClelland, in January, 1864, and the first Justice of the Peace was T. Donovan, in 1861.

Liberty Township was organized on April 14, 1875. This is the southeast township of the county, and was formerly part of Jackson Township. The first settlement made in the county was by E. N. Church on Humboldt Creek, in June, 1857, followed shortly afterwards by Flavius Chase. The first marriage in the township occurred on January 10, 1860, the contracting parties being William H. Church and Matilda Cooper. The first birth in the township was that of Mary E. Church, which occurred on the 30th day of October, 1857. The first postoffice established in the township was in 1863, which was named Grant, and the first postmaster was E. N. Church

Lyon Township was created on October 3, 1877, and embraces all that portion of territory originally included in Smoky Hill Township lying south of the Smoky Hill River. It is the southwest township of the county. The first settlement made in this township was by J. R. McClure, who pre-empted a claim at the mouth of Lyon Creek in December, 1854. Here, during that same winter, he erected a log cabin, into which he moved with his family in April, 1855. Bean, Cobb and McElroy came in 1855, and they were followed in 1856 by a number of Germans, who settled further up the creek. At the time of the first settlement of this township large herds of buffalo roamed over the country south of the Smoky Hill, and more than a year elapsed after her settlement before Mrs. McClure saw the face of a white woman. The first marriage celebrated in the township was that of William Staatz and Mary Recken, which took place in June, 1857. The first child born in the township was Ada McClure, in 1856. The township was named after General Lyon, who was killed at the battle of Wilson Creek.

Jefferson Township was organized October 29, 1878. This township was formerly embraced in Jackson Township. It extends the whole length of the county from north to south, and embraces all the territory included in Range 6, in Davis County south of the Kansas and Smoky Hill rivers. Jacob Spencer is accredited with being the first settler in the township, having located on Humboldt Creek in 1855. If Mr. Spencer was the first, he could not have much the start of several others, as we find a family named Beavers, and one named Berry, another Ranschoff, and still another named Booth, all there in 1855 The first marriage in the township was that of G. F. Gordon and Ruth Berry, in February, 1856. The first birth was that of William Beavers, October 30, 1855. The first store opened in the township was by N. S. Ranschoff, at Riley City, in 1855. The first postoffice in the township was established at Riley City in 1856, with Fox Booth as postmaster. The first school district in the township was organized on Clark's Creek, in 1862, by Riner Whitehair. Riley City has long since passed into the list of the towns that were, and the site on which it once stood is used as a farm. During its short existence, however, it was quite important in a small way. It was there the first board of commissioners of Riley County met, in December, 1856; and it was also there that the first board of commissioners of Davis County met and held its first meeting, in March, 1857. There, also, G. F. Gordon built and kept the first hotel in the county, but now there is not a landmark to tell where it once stood. The first wheat raised in Davis County was in Jefferson Township, on Humboldt Creek, by Jesse Spencer.

SCHOOLS AND COUNTY SOCIETIES.

There are forty-one organized school districts in the county, and forty-two schoolhouses, making an average of seven to each township. As to material, the buildings are divided as follows: Stone, 25; frame, 15, and log, 2. With three or four exceptions, the surroundings of the school buildings exhibit no signs of taste or neatness; and but very few—in fact, none—have gone to the trouble of setting out trees to ornament the grounds or shelter the children during hours of recess. The buildings in themselves are good, but many of them are not even surrounded by a fence. The County Superintendent of Public Instruction reports that many schools are deficient in maps, charts, globes, and other apparatus. This seeming lack of interest in external matters does not extend to the method of giving instruction, because in visiting several of the schools, we found the deepest interest manifested by both teachers and pupils. In 1881, the school population between the ages of eight and fourteen years was 1,255, of whom 613 were males, and 642 females, while the total school population, embracing all between the ages of five and twenty-one years, was 2,333, of whom 1,228 were males, and 1,105 females. The number of pupils enrolled was 1,861, which, divided according to sex, gave 986 males and 875 females. The average daily attendance during the year was 1,109, the males being 567, and the females 542. As showing the interest taken in schools by the parents of children, it may be stated that of the school population between the ages of eight and fourteen years, there were only twenty who did not attend school three months during the year. The salaries paid to teachers averaged, to males, $34.25; females, $29.82. The average number of mills levied for payment of teachers' wages was seven, and for all school purposes, eight and one-half. There were seventy-one persons examined during the year for teachers, of whom five were rejected, and sixty-six of the number applying received certificates. The average age of the persons applying for teachers' certificates was twenty-three and one-half years, and the average age of those who received certificates was twenty-four years. The foregoing statistics have no reference to the schools of Junction City, where the graded school-system has been adopted. The number of persons of school age in the city in 1881 was 941, of whom 459 were males and 482 were females. The number of pupils enrolled was 779, of whom 385 were males, and 394 females. The average daily attendance was 501, averaging, according to sex, males, 246; females, 255. There were nine teachers employed, eight of whom were males, and one female The number of months taught in the city schools during the year was ten. The total paid for teachers' wages in the city for the year was $2,865, and the salary of the principal was $900. The total current expenses for the year, including interest on bonds and repairs, was $6,256.86, and the cost per month, per capita of the average daily attendance, was $9.

Agricultural Society.—The Davis County Agricultural Society was organized on the 23d day of March, 1873, with John Davis as president, and N. F. Greene as secretary. Subsequent to this the society was re-organized under the name of the Kansas Central Agricultural Society, with Dr. Reynolds as president, and E. E. Heath as secretary. The first fair held by the society was in October, 1875, and in all respects was quite a success. Annual fairs have been held regularly by the society since that time, the seventh and last one held occurring on the 4th, 5th and 6th days of October, 1882. The interest manifested in these fairs has been increasing yearly, and they are now looked upon as the most interesting and attractive features of the county. Liberal awards are offered and made to exhibitors, and the spirit of friendly rivalry with which the agricultural classes enter into competition for prizes, gives a zest to agriculture and stock-raising, which adds greatly to the pleasure of farming, and makes it much more profitable. Monthly meetings of the society are held, at which essays on farming and stock-raising are read, and topics pertaining to agriculture thoroughly discussed. The society has a very fine fair-ground, containing forty acres, about three-quarters of a mile west of Junction City. One bad feature about it is that it is destitute of shade trees; but in a country where trees grow so fast as they do in Kansas, it will require but a few years to remedy this. The buildings erected for the exhibition of articles are well-built and commodious. A sufficiency of good, pure water for all purposes is obtained from a well upon the grounds, from which the water is pumped by a wind-mill. The grounds are enclosed by a tight board fence, inside of which is a very fine half-mile track. The last fair held was a great success, and the society is now in a most prosperous condition. The present officers are: C. E. Murphy, President; P. W. Powers, Secretary, and C. E. Murphy, John Wallace, F. O'Reilly, J. S. Coryell, George Heidel, John Davis, J. K. Wright, J. J. Blattner, S. T. Grant, H. L. Miller, and P. W. Powers, Directors.

Horticultural Society.—This society was organized in 1881, with William Cutler as president, and John Davis, acting secretary. That there has been a great awakening among the people within the last few years in regard to fruit culture is very evident, from the interest that is now taken in horticulture. Just prior to the opening of the State Fair, a meeting of those interested in the cultivation of fruit was held in the Tribune office at Junction City, when a grand exhibit of the different varieties of fruit raised was held. The exhibit of apples, pears and grapes, of which nearly every variety known was exhibited, was a surprise even to the people of Davis County, although all the fruit exhibited was raised within the borders of the county. For nearly three hours the office was crowded with visitors viewing and admiring the beautiful specimens, after which it was carefully boxed up and shipped to Topeka, to take its place among other exhibits at the State Fair. The society meets quarterly, when the merits and methods of horticulture are discussed in such a manner as to make the meetings both profitable and interesting. The society, it may be said, is yet in its infancy, but that it will be the means of creating increased interest in the culture of fruit is beyond question.

RAILROADS AND MANUFACTORIES.

There are three lines of railroads running through Davis County—namely: the Kansas Pacific, which enters the county on the north at the dividing line between Ranges 6 and 7, from which point it runs along the north bank of the Kansas River, passing Fort Riley on its way, and crossing the Republican almost at its point of junction with the Smoky Hill. Its inclination is southwest, and from where it crosses the river until it reaches Junction City it runs almost due south. Leaving this point it takes a westward course, running parallel with the Smoky, on the north side of the stream, leaving the county at the west line, two miles west of Kansas Falls. This was the first line of railway that entered the county, crossing Three Mile Creek on the Military Reservation, in Davis County, on the 6th day of October, 1866, and reaching Pawnee two days later, when the first scream of the construction-train locomotive was heard in Junction City. On Saturday, the 10th day of November, one long to be remembered by the early settlers of the town, the first train of cars touched the town-site, and the people of Junction City were jubilant. The next railway in the county was the Union Pacific, Southern Branch, now known as the Missouri, Kansas & Texas. This road runs south from Junction City, and work was commenced at the north end of the road, or Junction City, in April, 1869. On May 6, the first locomotive arrived for this road, and sufficient track was laid on which to run eight or ten cars. This road is the means of communication between Davis County and the south.

The next road in the county was the Junction City & Fort Kearney, the contract for building which as far as Clay Center, in Clay County, was let on April 9, 1872, on which work was commenced on the 4th day of June following, and on the 8th day of November, track laying was begun. In the following February regular trains commenced running from Junction City to Clay Center, and these three roads—the Kansas Pacific running east and west, the Missouri, Kansas & Texas, running south, and the Junction City & Fort Kearney, running north—comprise all the railways in the county at this date. The Junction City & Fort Kearney has its northern terminus now at Concordia, seventy-one miles north of Junction City.

If superior water-power privileges are all that is necessary to establish manufacturing enterprises, then Davis County ought to be the leading manufacturing place in the State. As yet, however, this vast power is allowed to go to waste. Virtually, this is the case, as the only use made of it is to run one or two flouring-mills. The first mill in the county, in point of importance, is owned by Mr. C. Fogarty, and is known as the "Star Mills." This mill is located on the south bank of the Smoky Hill, about three-fourths of a mile from Junction City. At the point on the river where the mill is built are great, rugged bluffs, which are hugged close by the water in its flow. Here Mr. Fogarty, in 1874, constructed a dam across the river, which has successfully stood the test of floods and ice-flows for eight years. It is what is known as a brush-dam, although over 100 cords of rock were used in its construction. At the western bank it is protected against washing by piling and rip-rapping. The dam is nine feet high, and the water-power is estimated at 250-horse. The mill is a substantially built frame building, 36x46 feet, and is four stories high. A little further up the stream was located the "Smoky Hill Mills," but a short time ago the building was torn down and the machinery sold. It was in this mill that two strangers were hung on the night of September 17, 1865. At that time it was used only as a saw-mill, but was afterward converted into a grist-mill. Some people are sufficiently superstitious to believe that the hanging of the two strangers had something to do with the bad luck that since that time attended the mill. Whatever the cause, certain it is that those who undertook to run it afterwards lost money by the operation, until finally no one would take it, and after standing idle a long time, the owner had it torn down, as already mentioned.

On Clark's Creek, in Jefferson Township, there is a good water-mill, owned by Henry Mitchell. It is not a large mill and has only two run of burrs, but its capacity is sufficient to supply a large section of country.

The "Union Mills" are located at Milford, and are owned by A. B. Whiting. It is run by steam-power, its machinery and appliances being of the very best kind. It is quite an extensive establishment, with three run of burrs and ample accommodation for the storage of grain. Mr. B. A. Fullington is contemplating the early completion of a water grist-mill on Madison Creek, a short distance from the village of Milford, and with this object in view, has the dam already constructed. In 1881, R. M. and C. H. Miller erected a very fine steam flouring-mill in Junction City. All its machinery and apparatus is of the very best and of the most approved known to the milling business. The mill has four run of burrs, and is capable of making 300 barrels of flour a day. It runs almost continually and does an immense business. Those mentioned, comprise all the mills in the county at present, but that the superior water-power of the county, that now goes to waste, will in the near future, be utilized to advantage and profit is almost beyond a doubt. At Kansas Falls, on the Smoky, near the western boundary line of the county is a water-power not excelled by any in the State. Why all this power should not be utilized is beyond comprehension. Davis County, and all those surrounding it, are admirably adapted to wool growing, and that woolen mills are not already established, is a mystery. There are also grand openings for paper mills, and the immense crops of corn would insure a rich profit to persons who would undertake the manufacture of starch and syrup. There is one cheese factory in the county, located in Jefferson Township, and owned by C. Boyer, in which is manufactured, annually, large quantities of cheese. There is also a creamery, known as the "Cedar Springs Creamery," located in the same township and owned by John K. Wright. That this can be made a highly lucrative business, is made plain by the great success met with by Mr. Wright in his undertaking, and from which he realizes large yearly profits. In Junction City there is quite an extensive wagon works, owned by C. P. Foglestrom. In addition to making wagons, all kinds of repairing in machinery is done. It is divided into departments, one for wood, another for iron, a third for painting, and still another for finishing. There is also a broom factory in Junction City, owned by John Louber, which employs several hands, and in which is manufactured all kinds of broom work, from the smallest hand-duster to the largest broom. The stone quarries in the neighborhood of Junction City might also be classed among the manufacturing industries of the county. From these quarries can be taken blocks of excellent magnesian limestone to almost any dimension, and a great deal of it is shipped to Kansas City and other places East, both in and out of the State, for building purposes. A great deal of the stone in the new State House, now in course of construction, was taken from the Junction quarries. In 1872, two stones weighing 10,000 pounds each, and two weighing 21,000 pounds each, were shipped from these quarries.

GENERAL STATISTICS.

The growth in the population of the county has not been very rapid, at least it would appear so, if figures only are considered. In considering, not only the growth in population, but also the growth in material wealth, it must be borne in mind that Davis is a very small county, compared with almost every other county in the State, containing only 260,480 acres, or 407 square miles. When this is borne in mind, it will be seen that the county has advanced in population about as rapidly as any of those surrounding it, and more rapidly than many. In 1860 the population of the county was 1,163; in 1870 it was 5,526, being an increase in ten years of 4,363, being an average increase per year of 436 and a small fraction over. The State census of 1875, however, gave the population as 4,611, being a decrease in five years of 915, or nearly 200 per year. After this it takes an upward turn, and in 1878 had reached 5,382, showing a gain in three years of 771, or an average gain of 257 per year. The United States census of 1880 gives the population of the county as being 6,994, being a gain in two years of 1,612, or 806 per year. This is a wonderful growth, and those who are thoroughly acquainted with the facts and have every means of knowing, say that the growth in the last two years will exceed that of the two years preceding 1880, and estimate the population of the county now, 1882, as not less than 8,000.

The rapidity with which Davis County has advanced in material growth during the last decade, ought to satisfy those who, in the early struggles of its existence, were most sanguine and hopeful as to the future of the county. We will allow the figures to tell the story for themselves. The following table will show the total average of field crops each year, for the years 1872 to 1881, inclusive.

24,415.50	24,005.50	22,805.85	30,181.87	30,147.50	33,422.25	40,042.00	52,945.00	51,828.15	54,967.00

These figures indicate that during the nine years set out in the above table, the average in field crops in 1881 reached 3,053 acres, more than double the average of 1872. Now, if we compare the value of the crop of 1874 with that of 1881, we find that the former was valued at $582,124.78, and the latter at $1,510,922.20, showing a gain in seven years of $928,797.42. The year 1874 is taken, because in that year was first attempted by the State Agricultural Department the work of compiling complete statistics. The returns of the different township assessors for the year ending March, 1882, which, by law, are required to be filed with the county clerk in June of each year, show the following facts relative to Davis County. Number of acres in farms, 121,324; valued at $1,149,085. Number of farm dwellings erected during the year, 70; valued at $57,650. The total acreage in field crops was 54,947. Number of tons of tame hay cut in 1881 was 1,020, and the number of tons of prairie hay was 20,729. The value of garden products sold was $2,492, and of eggs and poultry sold, $7,503. The cheese produced in family and factory was 1,350 pounds, and of butter there was made 118,007 pounds. The value of milk sold, other than for cheese and butter was $2,691. There were in the county at the date of these returns, 3,385 horses, 190 mules and asses, 3,260 milch cows, 8,150 other cattle, 6,414 sheep, and 7,768 swine. By a comparison with the figures of 1878, we find that horses have increased 779, mules and asses 60, milch cows 1,112, other cattle 3,276, sheep 6,253, and swine 4,649. These figures show a remarkable increase and would indicate that, during the last three or four years, the people of Davis County have been advancing rapidly in material prosperity. The value of animals slaughtered, or sold for slaughter, in 1881, was $134,496, as against $81,898 for 1880. The number of pounds of wool clipped was 5,471, as against 262 for 1880. The number of apple trees in bearing in the county in 1881 was 9,636, against 4,033 in 1880; pear trees 841, against 616; peach trees 47,552, against 33,945; cherry 4,721, against 2,151. The trees not in bearing were: Apple 31,926, pear 1,916, peach 37,278, plum 2,147, cherry 7,824. There were rods of fence in the county as follows: Board 9,046, rail 17,859, stone 39,708, hedge 35,717, and wire 33,172, making a total of 135,502 rods, representing a value of $169,377. The people are commencing to manifest considerable interest in the cultivation of forest trees, and in 1881 there were in the county 66 acres of artificial forest walnut trees, 31 acres of maple, 8 acres of honey locust, 78 acres of cottonwood, and 150 acres of other varieties. The foregoing statistical figures render any further statements unnecessary touching upon the prosperous condition of the people and the development of the material wealth of the county.

WAR RECORD.

At the breaking out of the war, the population of Davis County, all told, was 1,163. What proportion of this population was subject to military duty cannot be ascertained. Probably half were exempt either on account of youth, age, or sex. If this were so, and it is not an unreasonable supposition, then there were in the county at the commencement of the war for secession 582 men. The people of Davis County, however, were not all of one mind as to the righteousness of the war, and while the sentiment was largely in favor of the Union, there were a few who favored secession, some of whom immediately went South and joined the Confederate army, and in fact one of the earliest settlers of the county, W. W. Herbert, was captured at the battle of Fair Oaks, he being at that time Colonel of a South Carolina regiment. Those who favored the Union, however, were not slow in responding to President Lincoln's call for men. Capt. J. R. McClure recruited a company of over fifty men in the early part of 1861, which became Company B, of the Second Kansas Infantry. His Second Lieutenant was James Downer, of Davis County. The Captain, in September, 1861, had a foot shot off in a skirmish at Shelbina, Mo., after which he returned home and was subsequently appointed Quartermaster of the Eleventh Kansas. Company G, of the Eleventh Kansas, was nearly all recruited in Davis County, although the Captain, N. A. Adams, was from another county. A. C. Pierce, of Junction City, went out with the Company in 1861, as First Lieutenant, and was afterwards promoted to Captain in 1864. Captain C. F. Clark and Captain E. S. Stover recruited nearly two full companies in the county, and besides these, a good many of Davis County men enlisted in other counties. Never was a call for men made to which Davis County did not promptly respond, and when the draft her quota was always promptly supplied. The best information obtainable sets down the number of men furnished by Davis County to the war at between four and five hundred, being nearly every man in the county subject to military duty.

JUNCTION CITY.

This is one of the most beautifully located cities in the State. It is situated between the Republican and Smoky Hill Rivers, about two miles west of the point of confluence. Northward, the town extends almost to the south bank of the Republican, and its southeast corner nearly touches the north bank of the Smoky. At this point the river makes a bend, and runs north almost parallel with the eastern boundary line of the city, until it reaches as far north as the limits of the corporation, when it makes a sudden turn to the southeast. It is on the high land, or second bottom, as it is called, that the city is located. From the center of the town the ground slopes gradually to the north, south, east and west. To the north is the Republican, with its timbered banks and the rising ground beyond. To the south and east is the Smoky, from whose southern margin rises a line of high, romantic bluffs, overlooking the strip of valley that lies between the town and the river. To the west is open prairie, unfolding in width as the course of the rivers become farther apart. Close to the west limits of the city the prairie takes another rise, not abrupt, however, but sloping gradually upward and westward, and then rolling away in gentle undulations. A person standing on the high bluffs east of town and on the south bank of the Smoky, can have a splendid view of the city and its surroundings, and one that will amply compensate him for any trouble he may take to acquire it. Before him lies the city, with its spires, domes and turrets, and if he allows his gaze to travel a little beyond, in a northeasterly direction, he will see Fort Riley standing out full and clear on the rising ground above the Kansas River, with its tall flag-staff, from the top of which the stars and stripes float out on the breeze. From this point, if the observer permits his eye to follow in a circle westward, he will find what seems to be an unbroken line of bluffs or rising ground, forming, as it were, a basin, the center of which is considerably elevated. It is upon this elevation that the town of Junction City stands, its location being one of the most beautiful imaginable. The original town site, with the subsequent additions made thereto, contains 1,269.30 acres.

EARLY HISTORY.

The efforts made to establish a town upon this site, antedating the starting of Junction City, have been spoken of in the narrative history of the county, and call for no further mention. The history of Junction City commences with 1857, when the founders of the town, J. R. McClure, Robert Wilson, F. N. Blake, John T. Price and P. Z. Traylor organized themselves into a town company, and selected the town site upon which the city has been built. The survey of the site was commenced early in 1858, by Daniel Mitchell, and was completed early in the summer of that year. In the following year "Cuddy's addition" was added; in 1867 the site was further enlarged by the railroad addition; in 1870, Sanderson's, Schnell's and Miller's additions were added, and in 1874 it received a further enlargement by the adding of Price's addition. The first building erected on the town site was erected on the corner of Seventh and Washington streets, by the town company in May, 1858. Here the first sermon in town was preached by Rev. W. Millice, in July of that year. Buildings went up rapidly, and by the following spring the place bore the appearance of being quite a village. In April, 1859, F. N. Blake and E. S. Stover started a Sabbath-school; and in this month was held the first election for town officers. William Cuddy was chosen mayor, but imperfections having been discovered in the organization, the officers elected never qualified. Another election for town officers was held in July, the opposing candidates for mayor being R. C. Whitney and William Cuddy. Whitney was elected and became the first mayor of the town. The councilmen chosen at this election were Samuel Orr, Edward Cobb and W. K. Bartlett, and the town clerk was V. K. Speer.

In the latter part of 1859, Casper Bundle moved from Ogden to Junction City, and opened the first hotel in the town. The first deed issued by the mayor bears date January 16, 1860, and conveys to John M. Sullivan, Lot number 4, in Block 42. On the 7th day of March, 1860, the county commissioners made Junction City a voting precinct. In May, work commenced on the Episcopal Church, which was the first church erected in town. That the town must have grown wonderfully during the first two or three years of its existence, is evidenced by the fact, that in 1860, according to the United States census, the population of the county was 1,118, at which time the voting population was 422. This was the total vote cast in the county at an election held on the 25th day of June, 1860, on the question of locating the county-seat, and of this number, Junction City alone cast 224, being more than half the entire vote of the county. By this vote, Junction City became the county-seat, which it still continues to be. We incline to the opinion that elections must have been rather loosely conducted in those days, because the records show that the whole population of the city, in July, 1860, was only 217, being seven less than the votes cast the preceding month on the county-seat question. We only mention these discrepancies as we find them, without undertaking to explain them. On July 2, 1860, the county commissioners held their first meeting at Junction City. In November, 1861, Streeter & Strickler commenced work on their brick building at the corner of Washington and Sixth streets. This was the first brick building erected in town. It is a two-story building, with a store-room on the ground floor. The first school district in town was organized in July, 1862; but prior to that time, in April, Mrs. McFarland had opened a school, but whether it was a public or private school, is not stated. The first district school in town was opened on December 10, 1862, with O. Davisson as principal in charge. On Sunday, January 4, 1863, a union church was organized by Rev. William Todd, but as each denomination grew strong enough to support a church of its own, it withdrew from the union, until the Congregationalists were left as the only representatives of the original union church. In August, 1863, George H. Purinton opened the "City Hotel," which was the third hotel opened in town. In June, 1864, a Catholic Church was organized by Father Demotrius, and in March, 1865, the Methodists formed an organization. The next church organization in town was that of the Baptists, which was organized October 20, 1865, by Rev. Caleb Blood. On May 15, 1866, was laid the corner-stone of Trott Bros.' building on Washington Street, and in it was placed a copy of the Junction City Union, enclosed in a tin box. September 5, 1867, is one of the memorable days in the history of Junction City. Everybody in town felt happy and was in excellent spirits. The occasion that gave rise to such an exhibition of felicity and hilariousness, was the laying of the corner-stone of the Union Pacific, Southern Branch. No less a personage than Major General John Pope set the stone, and Col. Goss and Robert McBratney displayed their highest oratorical ability. Five days subsequent to this event, the corner-stone of the Methodist Church was laid, in which a copy of the Bible was placed, beside which, to make the foundation more sure, was laid a copy of the Union. As the Kansas Pacific Railway neared the city, new-comers crowded in by the score, until there was neither hotel accommodations nor house-room for them. This was an exceedingly prosperous year for the town, and houses sprang up as if by magic, and still the cry was, "More, more." In October of that year, 1866, the Kansas Pacific depot grounds were marked off, and a turn-table erected. In November, trains commenced to run from Leavenworth to Junction City, and a new era opened up for the people. In December the "Hale House" was completed, the commodiousness of which added greatly to the hotel accommodations of the town. The house opened for business on the morning of February 4, 1867, under the proprietorship of McMeekin & Dougher. Sixty men were served with breakfast on the morning of its opening; twenty-seven regular boarders were registered, and the first day's business closed with forty-five arrivals. These facts are mentioned to show how people were flocking to Junction City at that period. February, 1867, was noted for the high water in the Republican River, it having been higher that year than it had been at any time during the twelve preceding years. The high water carried away the railway bridge that crossed the Republican at this point, making the third bridge that had been carried away in fourteen years. In 1853 the government built a truss bridge across the Republican, which was carried off in 1856, and in the year following, another one was built, which was carried away in 1858, and the railroad bridge made the third. In March of that year (1867). Congress passed an act, granting to the State of Kansas, for bridge purposes, that portion of land embraced in the Military Reservation, lying between the Republican and Smoky Hill rivers, being that tract lying between Junction City and the fork of the rivers. This land, in March of the same year, was transferred by act of the Legislature to the Republican River Bridge Company, and this so aroused the indignation of the people of Junction City, that public meetings were held to denounce it, and a delegation was sent to Topeka to resist the claim of the Bridge Company to the reserve lands. The details of this transaction would make interesting reading, but as they bear more upon legislative doings than the history of the city, we will leave them unrecorded. On March 13, the county commissioners let a contract to Marsh, Hilliker & Co., to build a bridge across the Smoky Hill, southeast of town, for $17,500, upon which work was begun on the first day of the month following. Whether the particular day upon which work was commenced on the bridge, "All Fools Day," has any significance or not, we cannot say, but from the row it created we think somebody must have been "fooled." The bridge was completed on the first day of August, but the Smoky Hill Bridge Company refused to accept it, and declared it to be an outrageous fraud. Some three or four years afterwards, the bridge was accepted by the commissioners, and a settlement made with the contractors. Two weeks after the completion of the bridge across the Smoky, work was begun on the one across the Republican, which was completed in December, and accepted by the Governor and Attorney General of the State. The city election that took place on April 5, 1869, was the liveliest probably, that ever took place in Junction City. The rival candidates for mayor were, R. O. Rizer and R. O. Miller. The contest was close, and a good deal of acrimonious feeling was exhibted in the manner in which it was conducted. Some not satisfied with the ordinary methods of reasoning, endeavored to work conviction by means in which the fists became important factors, and that there were a few optical discolorations is not to be wondered at. The election was declared in favor of Miller, but Rizer contested it and carried it to the courts, where he was again defeated. One thing that added greatly to the growth and importance of Junction City after the completion of the Kansas & Pacific Railroad to that point, was the fact that it was made the end of the first division of the road. This of course, necessitated the building of a roundhouse, and other workshops at that place which naturally drew a good many people to settle in the town, In October, 1869, the Kansas Pacific Company sold the roundhouse, workshops, depot and thirty acres of ground to the U. P. Southern Branch Company, and on April 3rd, of the following year, the division was changed from Junction City to Wamego. On June 23, 1871, Junction City was visited by quite a fire, which destroyed several buildings on the northwest coroner of Seventh and Washington Streets. On July 18, a proposition was submitted to the voters of the city, asking $30,000 to build a new schoolhouse, which the people rejected. In August of the same year another proposition was submitted, asking for $10,000 for the same purpose, which was agreed to by a large majority. The schoolhouse was built after plans furnished by E. T. Carr. of Leavenworth, and was finished in October, 1872. It was dedicated on the 18th of November in grand style, the dedicatory address having been delivered by Gen. John Fraser, at that time Chancellor of the State University. The building is very neat and substantially constructed, and although the town has far outgrown its accommodation capacity, it was doubtless, at the time of its erection, sufficiently commodious to meet the wants of the community. It is a graded school, and in connection with it, but in another portion of the town, is another school which may be termed a primary or preparatory school, from which pupils, after having advanced to a certain stage in their studies, pass to the graded or higher school. Both these buildings, however, have been found to be too small to accommodate the number of school children in the city, and now, 1882, another very handsome and commodious school building is being erected.

In February 1873, trains on the Junction City & Fort Kearney Railway commenced making regular trips from Junction City to Clay Center. It was stipulated in the proposition to vote bonds to aid in the construction of the Junction City & Fort Kearney Railway, that the workshops of the company should be located at Junction City, and that work on the shops should begin before the 24th of April, 1873. For a time it looked as if the bonds would be forfeited, but just twelve days before the expiration of the stipulated time, work was commenced; but, after laying the foundation, the work was abandoned.

Quite a calamity befell Junction City in April, 1874, which for a time threatened the destruction of a great portion of the city. On the 13th day of that month, a fire broke out in the "Hale House," which stood on Washington street where the "Bartell" now stands. It spread with great rapidity, and although every effort was made to check its progress, before it could be extinguished, the "Hale House," "Brown's Hall," and eight or nine other buildings were totally destroyed. This calamity, followed as it was soon afterwards, by the fearful grasshopper calamity, by which not only Davis County, but the entire State was devastated, was a severe blow to Junction City, but the courage and enterprise of the people, enabled them to meet it bravely, and by the end of 1875, they were again on the high road to prosperity. In 1875, a Centennial Board was organized for the purpose of taking steps to appropriately celebrate the centennial year of the nation. The board consisted of Dr. Charles Reynolds President: A. C. Pierce, Secretary; and John T. Price, Treasurer. What they did, if anything, has not been recorded, but in February, 1876, the "Ladies' Reading Club," remembering what Webster is accredited as saying about the raising of the Bunker Hill monument. took hold of the matter and collected funds sufficient to erect a frame building, to which they gave the name of "Centennial Hall." The trustees of the club were, Mrs. H. A. Boller, Mrs. James Humphrey, Mrs. M. E. Clark, Mrs. N. S. Gilbert, and Mrs. John Davis. In 1870, the census showed Junction City to have a population of 3,100, and the entire population of the county to have been 5,526, but during the next five years, from 1870 to 1875, there was a decrease in the population of the county of 915, and the figures would indicate that the greater portion of this falling off went from Junction City, as the census of 1878 shows the population of the place at that time to have been only 2,203. Several causes contributed to this falling off, none of which are attributable to any fault that can be laid to Junction City, or the superior advantages by which it is surrounded. The removal of the division of the line from Junction City to Wamego in 1870, was one cause; the removal of the M. K. & T. workshops from Junction City to Denison, Texas, in 1873 was another cause; the great panic of 1873 was also felt in Junction City, as parties who had engaged in various manufacturing and industrial enterprises, were unable to stem the tide, and had to succumb; the great grasshopper raid of 1874, was another cause, and all these causes combined, falling in the space of five years, upon a city yet in its infancy, were surely sufficient to give it a great backset, and the only wonder is that the decrease in population was not greater than it really was. The census of 1880, shows the population of the place at that time to have been 2,977, and judging from the number of buildings that have been put up since that time we think the population now, November, 1882, may safely be set down at 3,500. Its growth in the last few years, while it has been very rapid, has been of a healthy, permanent character, and the majority of the buildings that have gone up, have been of a good class and substantial kind. Being the seat of justice of the county, it has a court house, but though the building is of stone, it is rather inferior, and not in keeping with the progress of the town or the advancement of the county. One thing the city can boast of is a beautiful park, well filled with elegant shade trees, which make it a delightful summer resort. Its beauty could be greatly augmented by a neat fence, but at present it is not enclosed by a fence of any kind. A place of great taste and beauty is the city cemetery, and those who have charge of it deserve great credit for the manner in which it is kept. In 1873, there were 1,000 trees and evergreens set out in it, and had those who sleep within the Silent City the choice of a resting place, they could not have selected a more beautiful spot. Junction City is a progressive town, and all kinds of business are well represented. The business houses are nearly all built of stone or brick, and some of the stores would grace a city of 50,000 or a 100,000 people. They are large, neatly built, elegantly fitted up and well stocked with goods. Dry goods, clothing, hardware, boots and shoes, drugs, groceries, millinery, jewelry, books and stationery, furniture, banks, and in fact all kinds of mercantile business are well represented. Its hotel accommodation is excellent. The "Bartell House" as a building, will compare favorably with any hotel in the State. It is a large four story brick building, substantially built. It was built in 1878, and opened for business in January 1879. Another very good hotel is the "Pacific House," a frame building of goodly size, neatly and comfortably furnished and well kept. There are several other inferior hotels, and all combined are capable of furnishing ample accommodation for every occasion. The city has nine churches, five of stone, and four frame. The city can also boast of a magnificent opera house, to which is connected a little history. It is a grand building, however, 65x140 feet. In 1880, the people were asked to vote bonds to the amount of $12,000 to build a city hall, the building to contain suitable offices for the city officials. This proposition was acceded to. At that time there were about $6,000 in cash in the city treasury, which the city authorities turned over to the contractors, thus making $18,000. Subsequent to this, and after the work was well under way, the city government issued $10,000 in city scrip to complete the building, thereby making the amount $28,000. This scrip they afterwards bonded, and bonds wereissued and the scrip called in. The course pursued by the authorities and that portion of the community who favored the erection of the building, gave rise to a very bitter feeling on the part of those who opposed it. A spirit of great hostility existed between the two parties, and when the walls were about completed, the party opposed to it brought an injunction suit to restrain the builders from going any further, but the court decided that they were too late, and the work went on. Shortly after the injunction was dissolved, and before the building was under roof, an accident occurred which, had it taken place in the daytime, would doubtless have caused loss of life, but which fortunately happened in the night: the tower, which had been run up to a great height, and, as afterwards proved, on an insufficient foundation, tumbled and fell, destroying a large portion of the front of the building, and entailing a loss on the city of about $2,000. The City Council immediately ordered an investigation of the causes of the accident, and employed E. T. Carr as supervising architect, and soon all traces of the accident were gone, and the building completed in the fall of 1881. It is a magnificent structure, well furnished throughout, and admirably adapted to the purposes for which it was intended. To repair this injury, required about $2,000 more, so that by the time it was finished, the $12,000 that the people had voted to build a City Hall, had grown to $30,000, and instead of getting a hall, they got a grand opera house. Junction City is a prosperous, thriving place, and has a magnificent country to support it. Everything in and about the city has an air of thrift and neatness. There are a great many very handsome residences, surrounded with neatly trimmed and tastefully ornamented lawns, which bespeak aesthetic culture. What Junction City may be in the future is yet hidden in the womb of time, but if it does not grow to be one of the most flourishing cities in the State, then nature has lavished her gifts in vain. Junction City was incorporated as a city of the second class, February 9, 1859. The first sermon preached in town was by Rev. W. Millice, a Southern Methodist, in July, 1858; the first school opened in town was by Mrs. McFarland, April 7, 1862; first district school in November, 1862, under the charge of Mr. O. Davisson; first hotel was opened August, 1863, by Geo. H. Purinton; the first Sunday-school organized in town was by F. N. Blake and E. S. Stover, in April, 1859; the first marriage that occurred in town was that of John Powers and Miss ——— ———, in 1858; the first child born in the city was Lizzie, daughter of Robert and Elizabeth Henderson, on the 5th day of August, 1858; the first post-office established in town was in 1858, with L. J. Harris as postmaster; the first store opened in the city was by L. J. Harris, in May, 1858; the first church erected in the city was in 1860, the Episcopal; the first paper published in the city or county was the Sentinel, edited by B. H. Keyser, the first number of which was issued in June, 1858; and the first work at building on the town-site was commenced in May, 1858.

THE PRESS, CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

The Protestant Episcopal Church was organized in December 1859, as the Parish of St. John. It is now known as the Church of the Covenant. In May, June and July of the year following, the walls of their church were erected, and the building was completed in the course of the year. This was the first church edifice erected in the city. It is a neatly-built stone building, and stands in the center of a beautiful plat of ground. The property of this church is valued at $6,000. Its present membership is thirty, and its pastor is Rev. Charles Reynolds. Although the first built church in the city, it was not consecrated until May 10, 1870.

The Presbyterian Church was organized in January, 1860, but not until 1868 did they take any steps towards building a church. In May of that year they purchased two lots fronting the southeast corner of the city park, with a view to having a building erected. In August, 1869, they resolved to build, and a committee was appointed to further the work. In May, 1870, the authorities made a contract for the building of their church, which was so far completed in December that a festival was held in it, by which the church cleared $925. In January, 1871, the building was ready for occupancy, and the first worship that took place in it was on January 29 of that year. The church was dedicated on July 14, 1872, the dedicatory sermon being preached by Rev. Dr. McCabe, of Topeka. The church is built of stone, and its style of architecture is beautiful. It is an edifice that would be a credit to any city. The property of this church is valued at $12,000. It has a membership of 181, and its pastor is Rev. A. T. Hale.

The Methodist Church.—A society of this church was organized in Junction City, in March, 1865. On the 10th day of September of the following year, the corner-stone of their church was laid, and the building was completed early in 1867. It is a very fine stone structure of neat design and good finish. It was dedicated on the 21st day of July, 1867, Rev. A. C. George, of St. Louis, preaching the dedicatory sermon. Its property is valued at $3,500. It has a membership of 100, and its pastor is Rev. J. W. Mitchell.

The Baptist Church was organized by Rev. Caleb Blood, October 20, 1865, the reverend gentleman having located in Junction City the June previous. In August, 1869, the society took steps towards the erection of a church, and in the beginning of the same year work was commenced upon the building. It was completed in the spring of the succeeding year, and was dedicated on the 5th day of June, 1870. It is a stone edifice, tastefully constructed and well finished. The property of the church is valued at $4,000. Its membership is seventy-five, and at present it is without a pastor.

The Catholic Church was organized in Junction City by Rev. Father Demotrius, in June, 1864, and in 1867 steps were taken to have a church built. The building was completed and consecrated in 1869. The church is in keeping with the taste and magnificence usually displayed by this denomination in the erection of its places of worship. It is a stone building, beautifully designed and well finished. The property of the church is valued at $8,000. It has 150 members, and its pastor is Rev. Father Carius.

The Congregational Church.—The exact date of the organization of the society of this church is not given. That it had an existence prior to January, 1863, we think is evident, because on the 4th day of that month we find that a Union Church was organized by Rev. William Todd, and in connection therewith is mentioned the fact that the Union Church became afterwards the Congregational. In the latter part of 1868, the society commenced the erection of a church building, which was completed in January, 1869, and was dedicated on March 4 of that year. The church is a small frame building, void of taste or neatness. It stands on an uninclosed lot, and time and the weather have denuded it of paint. The membership is small, numbering only twenty-five persons, which, probably, accounts for its present condition. It is located in the central portion of the town, just across the street from Centennial Hall, which makes the property quite valuable. It is valued at $3,000, and Rev. M. D. Tenny is the pastor.

The German Methodist Church has been but recently organized, but during the present year (1882) the members have erected a very neat frame church edifice. The property of this church is valued at $1,500; its membership is only twenty, and the pastor is Rev. J. L. Sternberg.

The African Methodist Church, though but lately organized, yet by zealous efforts and the liberality of the people, has been enabled to complete in 1882 a very comfortable little frame church building. Their church property is valued at $800. The membership of the church is forty, and the pastor is Rev. Robert Rector.

The Baptist Church (colored).—This organization, also, is of recent origin, but they, too, completed a neat little frame church edifice in 1882. The property is valued at $800. The church has fifty members, and the pastor is Rev. George W. Brown.

The Universalist Church has quite a society in town, the members of which meet for worship in the Centennial Hall.

The Junction City Sentinel was the first paper ever published in Junction City or Davis County. It was Democratic in politics, and B. H. Keyser was its editor. The first number appeared in June, 1858. In July, 1859, Keyser was succeeded by Samuel Medary, Jr., who changed the name of the paper to the Kansas Statesman. W. W. Herbert and William Cuddy purchased the paper in the spring of 1860, and G. W. Kingsbury and W. S. Blakely became its publishers. In September, 1861, Kingsbury, retired from the paper, and in November following the Statesman ceased to exist.

The Frontier Guide was started shortly after the demise of the Statesman by H. T. Geery, into whose hands the material of the office of the Statesman had fallen. Its publication was continued under the name of the Guide until September, 1861, when it was changed to Kansas Frontier. In November, 1861, Mr Geery was succeeded by George E. Dummer. The office was partially destroyed by soldiers from Fort Riley on March 10, 1862, and on the 15th of the same month they utterly demolished it, and forced its editor to enlist in the Union army.

The Junction City Union made its first appearance on the 12th of September, under the name of the Smoky Hill and Republican Union, under the editor and proprietorship of G. W. Kingsbury. It was Union in politics. W. S. Blakely and George W. Martin assumed charge of the paper on the 30th day of January, 1862, who, in turn, were succeeded by Dunlap & Russell, on November 19, 1864. The latter changed the name of the paper to the Courier, but after two issues under this name it suspended. On April 15, 1865, the paper was revived by George W. Martin, under the name of Junction City Union, which it still retains. On April 28, 1866, the publishing firm took the name of Porter & Martin. From November 1, 1866, until July 29, 1867, the paper was issued as a daily, still keeping up its weekly publication. In the meantime, on May 11, 1867, Porter retired from the paper, and on the 15th J. W. Dalaney took his place. His connection with the paper only lasted until the 18th of December of that year, when he, too, retired. G. W. Martin continued to retain the proprietorship of the paper, but on August 9, 1873, N. L. Prentiss became its editor, which position he held until March 6, 1875, when G. W. Martin and H. H. Snyder became its editors, and remained such until December, 1875, when Mr. Martin became sole editor. John E. Rastall assumed editorial charge in June, 1876, which he retained until August, 1877, and on the 15th of the following month S. S. Prouty became its editor, to whom, on October 1, 1877, the office was leased for two years. George W. Martin has been sole editor since the expiration of that lease, and has been sole proprietor since 1869. The frequent changes in the editorship, between 1872 and 1880, was owing to the fact that Mr. Martin had been elected State Binder, which office he held for eight years, and which necessitated his being at Topeka. The Union is a weekly paper, and Republican in politics. "Hubbard's Newspaper and Bank Directory of the World," for 1882, gives the circulation of the paper, as sworn to, at 900.

The Junction City Avalanche issued its first number July 17, 1868, with A. S. Ruling as editor. It was Democratic in politics, and its existence was limited to a little less than three months.

The Junction City Tribune was ushered into the world August 14, 1873, under the management of Henry Farey and Theodore Alvord, and took the position of an independent journal. On March 12, 1874, Mr. Farey withdrew, and Mr. Alvord continued its publication until July 1, 1875, when the paper fell into the hands of John Davis & Sons, where it still remains, and who are sole editors and proprietors. In politics it is independent greenback. A circulation of 1,400 is claimed for it.

The Davis County Republican is a seven column folio sheet, just ushered into existence by the Davis County Republican Publishing Company. Its first number appeared September 16, 1882, so whatever history it may have is yet to be made. The editor is J. H. Franklin, with Rev. J. A. Reitz as assistant. It starts out as being Republican in politics.

OGDEN'S MONUMENT.

FORT RILEY.

While Fort Riley is neither a city, town, nor village, the position it occupies, and has occupied in Davis County, entitles it to a page in the history of the same. It is located on the north side of the Kansas River, distant from Junction City about four miles by wagon road, or three miles by rail. A person would naturally suppose from its name that it was a fortification, but if he looks to see anything of the kind, with embrasures and cannon, he will look in vain. It is not a fort, but simply a post where troops are stationed. There is barrack accommodation for twelve companies, with stabling for six hundred horses. The barracks are built of stone, in the shape of a square, overlooking the river. Two sides of the square are occupied by the soldiers' quarters, and two by the officers. The barracks and parade ground are enclosed by a beautiful fence, and the country surrounding is among the grandest that eye ever rested upon. A little to the west of the barracks, on a beautiful knoll, and enclosed by a neat fence, stands a very fine monument, erected to the memory of Major E. A. Ogden. This officer was in command of the post in 1855, at the time the cholera made such terrible ravages among the soldiers. The surgeon had left, and the Major acted in the double capacity of commander and physician, going around among the afflicted men and doing all in his power to alleviate their suffering. He continued in this good work until he was attacked himself by the dread disease, to which he fell a victim. The monument is made of limestone, taken from a quarry in the neighborhood, and is of neat design and elegant construction. On the east side of it is inscribed the following: "Erected to the memory of Brevet Major E. A. Ogden, the founder of Fort Riley. A disinterested patriot and generous friend, a refined gentleman, a devoted husband and father, and an exemplary Christian. Few men were more respected and loved in their lives, or more lamented in their deaths. As much the victim of duty as of disease, he collectedly closed a life in the public service distinguished for integrity and faithfulness." On the west side it bears the following: "Brevet Major E. A. Ogden, Assistant Quartermaster United States Army, died at Fort Riley, August 3, 1855, aged forty-four years. 'And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me: Write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labor, and their works do follow them.'" The location of Fort Riley is peculiarly beautiful and attractive. It is built on the land of the Military Reservation, which embraces a tract of about twenty miles square, a small portion of which only is in Davis County, directly opposite the fort and south of the Kansas River, the larger portion extending north from the fort into Riley County. When Satan tried to tempt our Savior by showing Him and offering Him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, we incline to the belief that he must have omitted all the region of country in the vicinity of Fort Riley. We have sailed from Cork to Queenstown, and the scenery on either side was grand; we have passed up the Bosphorus from Constantinople to the sea of Marmora, and beheld its scenery in all its enchanting loveliness, but let a person place himself on one of the bluffs in the vicinity of Fort Riley, and a scene will spread out before him that will equal, if not surpass, either of them. Looming up to the south, with slopes and groves intervening, are the hills that mark the location of Clark's Creek; to the north is a wide sea of open prairie, rising and falling in gentle undulations like the unperturbed waters of some great lake; to the east, stretching away for miles, you follow the windings and turnings of the river, whose course is marked by heavy bodies of timber, majestic in growth and rich in foliage, [illegible] it courses onward through a charming valley teeming with golden grain and lofty corn, with every here and there a comfortable house standing in the midst of beautiful surroundings, which marks the peaceful home of the settler; to the west the view is simply magnificent. Here and there through the foliage you catch glimpses of the two rivers, the Smoky Hill and Republican, as they come gliding along, one inclining to the northeast, and the other to the southeast, until their waters meet and kiss, and glide quietly and smoothly into the Kaw, a short distance west of Fort Riley. Looking up the valley of these two streams, the scenery is highly diversified and extremely beautiful in its diversifications. As you allow your gaze to extend westward, the valley widens, and between you and the horizon are wide fields of rich pasture, and homesteads marked by artificial groves. Gradually withdrawing your view from the horizon, and a short distance from where you are standing, the eye rests on the spires of Junction City towering up above the trees, until finally looking from the eminence you have selected as a point of observation, the Kansas River flows smoothly along, as it winds its serpentine course to mingle its waters with those of the muddy Missouri. For a moment the eye dazzles as it rests upon the shining steel rails of the Kansas Pacific Railway, made bright by the friction of travel, then all at once you hear the scream of the locomotive, and the next instant the train goes bounding by at lightning speed. The person whose imagination will allow him to picture to his mind's eye all these objects, and locate them so as to be most effective in a landscape panorama, will be enabled to form some conception of the grandeur of the scenery presented by the country surrounding Fort Riley. Another fact connected with the fort, and one worthy of mention, is, that it is very nearly, almost quite, the geographical center of the United States. Let any person who is desirous of ascertaining the exact location of Fort Riley, take a map of the United States and fold it once from east to west, and then from north to south, then let him unfold it, and the point in the center, where the marks of the folds have crossed, will mark almost the identical spot where stands the monument erected to the memory of Major Ogden.

MILFORD.

Milford is a small place in the northwestern corner of the county. It can scarcely be called a town, but inasmuch as its existence antedates that of the organization of the county, it is worthy of a brief mention. The town site known as Milford was located in 1855, by Abram Barry, S. D. Houston, B. E. Fullington, Moses Younkins and Frank Smith. It was then known by the name of Bacheller. It is situated on the Republican River, and is a station on the line of the Junction City & Fort Kearney Railway. It is a more of a trading point for the section of country that surrounds it, than a town. It has three small stores, a church, a schoolhouse, a steam flouring mill, and a few dwelling houses. The population, all told, can not exceed 100 or 150. Surrounding it is an excellent country, and it is just far enough away from Junction City and other larger towns to insure it a certain amount of country trade. The first post-office in Milford Township was established at Milford—then Bacheller—in 1861, and the first postmaster was Major Barry.

At Milford, the Congregationalists have a very fine frame church building, which was erected in 1877, and their church property is valued at $2,500 The membership of this church is thirty-five, and the pastor is Rev. M. S. Riddle.

In Smoky Hill Township there is an organization which is known as the St. John's Evangelical, which has a neatly built stone church. Its membership is fifty, and the pastor is Rev. Peter Lehman.

In Lyon Township, the German Lutherans have a tastefully built stone church, which was erected in 1872. The Baptist organization, in that township, also have just completed (1882) a very handsome edifice.

In Jefferson Township the Methodist Society, although numbering only fifteen members, have a neat little church, valued at $600.

In Liberty Township the Methodists have a church in the vicinity of Moss Springs.

In Jackson Township the Catholics have a comfortable and neat stone church, which was erected in 1872, and valued at $700. The membership of the church is 100, and the pastor is Rev. Father Ennis, of Wamego, who holds service there once every two weeks.

From the foregoing statements it will be observed that there is not a township in the county but that has one or more churches, which is somewhat remarkable for a comparatively new country.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

LUCINDA BADGER, wife of the late John S. Badger, who located in Riley County in the spring of 1855, on Government land, under the pre-emption right, about six miles south of Milford, on Sections 17 and 18, Lots 4 and 5, Jackson Township. They were the first settlers in that part of the Republican Valley. Fort Riley was their nearest post-office, six miles away, while the nearest grist mill was at Kansas City, 150 miles off. They erected the first house in the above valley, above Fort Riley, in August, 1855. They had no team of their own for nearly two years after locating. Various tribes of Indians roamed over the wild prairies, and the vast herds of buffalo, elk and deer were only occasionally molested by the wily savages for years. The Badgers had plenty of wild game with which they graced their table at every meal, but often went hungry for bread. People in those days have been known to dig up their potatoes which had been planted, and eat them, but only in cases of emergency. But the early pioneers in those days often were obliged to undergo hardships now never experienced in the West. Mr. Badger worked at anything he could find to do for several years, until he could get his farm under cultivation. He was born in New York, December 24, 1815. Mrs. Badger, nee Fowler, was born October 24, 1820, in Washington County, Pa. They were married, December 5, 1839; they had twelve children—Martha E., Ephraim, John S., Rebecca, Alcinia, Alonzo, Cornelia C., Sarah M. (deceased), Byron, Frank, William E. and Morgan F. John S. and Ephraim served three years in the Rebellion, and came out without a scratch. Mr. Badger died December 26, 1868, from the effects of an injury received by a saw log rolling on him.

JOHN FAWLEY, merchant in general line of groceries and dry goods, opened the trade in the spring of 1879. He bought his present store in 1881, and carries a stock of about $4,000. He is also postmaster, and owns a farm on Sections 9 and 10, Township 10, Range 5 east, containing 720 acres, with 170 cultivated. He first located one-half a mile east of Milford, in 1864, and followed farming until he began mercantile business. He was born in Rockingham County, Shenandoah Valley, Va., August 1, 1834, and was raised on a farm. He lived in his native State until he came to Kansas. He was married in December, 1859, to Miss Sophia Brenneman, in his native place; they have two sons—Abraham, now assisting in his father's store, and Ashby A., now on their farm. The father and mother are members of the Congregational Church of Milford.

(now Davis County), Madison Township, Section 31, May 3, 1856; opened a farm, carried it on about ten years, sold out and located on his present home, Section 6, Township 10, Range 5 east. He owns the south half of Section 6 and the north half of Section 7, being 640 acres of land, with 200 of the same cultivated. There are two fine streams of pure spring water running through his farm—Madison Creek on the west half, and Spring Creek on the east half. The two unite near the center of the farm, and form a fine stream of water, with a mill-power, on which his son-in-law, Charles A. Streeter, is erecting a grist-mill, at an expense of $5,000. The capacity of the mill will be 100 bushels of wheat and 200 of feed in twenty-four hours. Mr. Fullington certainly has the model farm of Davis County, which contains the varieties of timber in abundance herein named: oak, walnut, hickory, sycamore, elm, cottonwood, soft maple and box elder. Mr. Fullington was born in Cambridge, Vt., in 1819, lived in his native State until 1852 (being raised on a farm), when he went to California and spent three years for his health; he returned in 1855 to his native place He represented Riley County two terms in the State Legislature, 1862 and 1863, and 1863 and 1864. He was married in 1848 to Miss Louisa Carpenter, a native of Johnson, Vt.; they have one daughter, Alice Elizabeth, now married to Mr. Charles A. Streeter. They are all members of the Congregational Church of Milford.

J. W. C. PIERCE, farmer, carpenter, etc., P. O. Milford, first settled at Cedar Creek, Riley Co., Kan., in 1855; worked at his trade and took a pre-emption claim. He built the first bridge across the Blue River, near Manhattan, March 6, 1854. He moved his family to Fort Riley, where he took charge of a Government saw-mill for seven years, afterwards operated the saw-mill at Manhattan for three years, then came to Milford, Davis County, and erected a saw-mill in Milford Village, then a wilderness. He has since worked at his trade and farmed. His place is located south of Milford Village, a few miles, and contains eighty acres, with fifty-six cultivated; has a fine peach orchard and a grove of fine timber. He was born in New York City, May 22, [illegible], and was married in 1850 to Miss Mary A. Waller, of Virginia. He is a member of the Masonic order of Manhattan and the Congregational Church of Milford.

At the beginning of hostilities between the United States and Mexico, he enlisted as a private in the First United States Dragoons, with which he marched across the plains to Santa Fe, and thence to Old Mexico. Col Kearney having been promoted to the position of brigadier general in the regular army, left Companies I and G at Santa Fe, under command of Capt. J. H. K. Burgum. CLOUD COUNTY.

LOCATION, SOIL AND STREAMS.

CLOUD, formerly Shirley County, is on the west side of the sixth Principal Meridian in the second tier of counties from the north. It is bounded on the north by Republic, on the east by Washington and Clay, on the south by Ottawa, and on the west by Mitchell and Jewell counties. The northern third of the county lies in the Republican Valley, and its southwest townships are in the valley of the Solomon, making it agriculturally, one of the finest in the State. The elevated, rolling and quite broken country between the Republican and Solomon rivers at first was considered useless, but a large portion of it is now under cultivation; yet it it is better suited for grazing purposes.

The soil of the valleys is exceedingly rich and friable—a rich alluvial, from three to ten feet in depth. The uplands consist of a black vegetable mould, ranging from ten inches to three feet in depth. In favorable seasons the uplands yield very large crops. There is quite a difference between the soils of the Republican and Solomon valleys, as the latter yields large crops of winter and spring wheat, while the former does not. Along the banks and bluffs of the Republican are extensive quarries of limestone, while the majority of the quarries along the Solomon River are a red sandstone, which is also true of the Smoky Hill River, whose valley, like that of the Solomon is noted for its wheat crops. Like the soil of Nebraska, it is most admirably constituted to stand both drouth and wet seasons, it being very porous to a great depth.

The Republican River enters the county seven miles east of its northwest corner, flows in a southeasterly direction for about ten miles, and then east through Township 5, running in its serpentine course over forty miles in the county. The Solomon, with about ten miles of its course, crosses the southwest corner of the county. Besides the extensive streams, there are numerous smaller ones traversing the county in every direction. Salt, Elk, Upton and Hoy creeks are tributaries of the Republican from the north; Beaver, Oak, Wolf and Buffalo, with its numerous branches, are tributaries from the south. The southern part of the county is most thoroughly drained by numerous branches of the Solomon and Smoky Hill rivers, principal among which are Fisher, Pipe and Chapman creeks.

The Solomon and its tributaries are better timbered than the Republican and branches, although for the present there is an abundance on both streams. The prevailing woods are cottonwood, elm and box elder, although in places, large groves of oak abound. Walnut, ash, honey locust, willow, hackberry, coffee bean, and mulberry are found. In the list of wild shrubbery may be mentioned hazel, black currant, choke cherries, black raspberries, black'erries and grapes.

The principal building material is limestone, but a few quarries of red sandstone are found on the Solomon River. An excellent brick clay can be found in all parts of the county.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.

The first attempt at settlement in Cloud County, according to J. B. Rupe, was made in the fall of 1858, by John and Lew Fowler, hunters and trappers. The next year, they, with G. W. Brown, plotted a town site upon the land now comprising the farm of Donald McIntosh, and designated it Eaton City. They also built a house and lived in it during the following winter. Nicholas Eslinger, of Washington County, assisted in the raising. It was situated in the western part of what is now the city of Clyde, and was afterwards called the Conklin House. Before the Conklins occupied it, Mr. Brown lived in it temporarily with his family. The Fowlers were single men. The Conklin House was torn down by a mob in 1862, as hereafter detailed. Some breaking of land was done near the house, and a well commenced; thus showing that the design was to found a permanent home. In 1879 the well was filled by dirt thrown from the track of the Kansas Pacific Railroad. The surveyors had gone East, and intended to return and prove up on the land. The Fowlers selected claims, but did not file on them before they enlisted in a Kansas regiment, and when the war was over, their claims had been taken. Brown must have left the county early in the spring of 1860, as no further trace of him can be found.

In the spring of 1860, John Allen, of Kentucky, and his son-in-law, Sutton McWhorter, took claims north of Lake Sibley, on the military road to Fort Kearney, and laid out a town which they named Union City. Mr. Allen brought with him sixty head of blooded stock. Three other families from Kentucky, comprising Allen's party, settled near him. While this party were building their cabins, Phillip Kizer, Carey Kizer and their brother-in-law, Newton Race, with their wives, children, two hired men and forty head of cattle, passed up the river and selected a location on White Rock Creek, three or four miles from its mouth, and twenty-five miles northwest of Lake Sibley. Messrs. Park, Heffington and Finney settled on Elm Creek about the same time; and during the year, Daniel Wolf, from Pennsylvania, with several sons, located on the creek which bears his name, and some few miles southwest of Concordia.

Jacob Heller took a claim on the 20th of June, 1860, and his father, Moses, and two brothers, David and Israel, came to Cloud the coming fall. In October, 1860, Jacob accidentally shot himself in the mouth while drawing a loaded gun from a wagon, muzzle foremost. He died from the effects of the wound, his death being recorded as the first in the county.

On the 8th day of July, 1860, J. M. Hagaman, J. M. Thorp and August Fenskie came to the county, and on the 15th, settled on Elm Creek. Mr. Hagaman has resided in the county from that time, and is the oldest permanent settler in Cloud County. He has been prominently identified with the growth of his community, and has written a history of Cloud County. This history has been drawn upon to some extent by the compilers of the present work.

In July, 1860, most of these settlers left the county, on account of the Indian scare. None remained except J. M. Hagaman's family, J. M. Thorp and August Fenskie. Mr. Heffington, however, returned to the county in the spring; remained, and died about three years thereafter. His remains now repose in Clyde Cemetery. Mr. Parks sold his claim to David Heller for a yoke of steers in April, 1860.

John and Lew Fowler, the first settlers of the county, enlisted in the Fifth Kansas Volunteers, on the 5th of August, 1861. John was discharged in December, 1862, for disability, but Lew remained in the service until June 22, 1865. Moses Heller had a son in the army, and J. M. Thorp had two—Caleb and Jacob. Besides these, who served in Kansas regiments from this county, of the early settlers, may be mentioned Fred. Chapbanskie, David Robinson, Emanuel Cline, Joseph Berry and Charles Davis.

Emigration to the county was almost cut off by the war. Many who had but just commenced to establish a home in this new country, joined the Union army, and were never permitted to return to their new homes, preempting, with their comrades, only some six feet of Southern soil.

The year 1860, known as the great drouth year, was nearly as disastrous to the emigration to Kansas as the Civil war. The new settlers were discouraged, and doubts were entertained of the advisability of remaining in a country subject to such dry seasons. Many were disheartened, and either returned to their old homes or removed to other States. Those that remained, were able to subsist until the spring of 1861, but found themselves without seed, and were obliged to go to Atchison for it. But the spring and summer of 1861 was not a repetition of 1860, as the harvest was abundant. The population at the close of the year 1860, was about eighty. With an abundant harvest, the settlers of Cloud were still in an unenviable condition at this early date, as they were sixty miles from a post-office, and 150 miles from mill or market for their grain.

During the war the increase in population was very slow, and in Kansas, more than in the older States, progress in internal improvements was stopped; hence, for years, Cloud County was without rail or water transportation.

During the winter of 1861–62, the most sorrowful event that occurred was the death of Mrs. M. A. Menzel and her child. Difficulty was experienced in obtaining material for a coffin as lumber was scarce, and the nearest lumber-yard was fifty miles distant. Enough was finally obtained by visiting the different houses. The mother and child were placed in the rude coffin, and in the silence of the plains, without ceremony, were laid to rest in "mother earth," and consigned to her protection. In 1862, Charles and Peter Conklin, with their two sisters and an orphan child, lived in this first house built in the county, on the town site of Eaton City (before mentioned) that was on the farm of Donald McIntosh. It was also the best house in the county at this time, built of hewn logs and covered with shakes. The citizens of Cloud and adjoining counties suspected that these men were a part of an organized band of horse thieves. A man by the name of James Fox, the founder of Clifton, in Washington County, and seconded by one Rose, organized a company for the purpose of lynching these two men. Fox, it was afterwards found, was as mean and desperate a character as either of the men he sought to kill "honorably." He afterwards joined a band of bushwhackers, and his body was last seen, by one who knew him while here, pierced with bullets. The Conklins, learning of the design upon their lives, secreted themselves near their home. The mob came and not finding their men, tore down the house that sheltered the child and innocent sisters, and still more inhumanly, voted to lynch any one who should, in any way, aid the sufferers. After leveling the house, the assailants scoured the country for the boys, and as one of them afterwards confessed, passed close to their place of concealment, but being well armed, they would have taken some lives before being captured. During the night they made their escape to Iola, where they were captured by United States soldiers, carried to Leavenworth, and confined in the calaboose. They escaped a second time, and Pete eventually died in Missouri. Charles disappeared from sight. For two weeks the two helpless women and the orphan child lived with only a sheet stretched over poles, for a covering from the chilly night winds and storms, and with what little food they rescued from their late home. No one dared to give them aid, until J. M. Hagaman had the courage, in the face of the decree of the mob, to take his ox-team and carry them to the river, where they were among friends. He did more. He denounced the conduct of the mob as an outrage, which required in him more than ordinary courage. It is, perhaps, needless to add that he was never molested. It is doubtless true that only one Cloud County man—Emanuel Cline—was concerned in this affair.

The crops and increase in population of 1863 and 1864 resembled that of 1862. But the year 1864 is noted as the commencement of public religious worship in Cloud County. Until late in the fall, no public worship had been held, but finally, as is usually the case in new countries, the Methodist circuit preacher was the first minister to commence the mission of his life in Cloud County. This honor falls to Rev. R. P. West, of Republic County, as he settled there and made it his home for many years. Mr. West held his first services in the house of Moses Heller, which at that time, was ample enough to hold all the settlers living near enough to attend. Rev. Mr. West was, in a sense, eccentric. He usually enlivened his audience with a few jokes or stories, and then proceeded to deliver his sermon. He was everywhere known as a man of kindness of heart and geniality of manner; ever ready and anxious to do good and relieve suffering in body or mind. His circuit included Jewell, Republic, Washington, Clay and Cloud counties. He was also the first Representative from Republic County, and was twice elected his own successor. Miss Rosella Honey taught the first school in the county, at Elm Creek, in the summer of 1864. In October, 1860, was born the first child—Augutus, son of Ellen and August Fenskie.

INDIAN TROUBLES.

The greatest Indian scare in the history of the county occurred during this year (1864). It was reported that the confederates had leagued with the Indian tribes, and were warring on the frontier from Minnesota to the Gulf of Mexico. It occurred just after the great Indian Raid in Nebraska, which extended from Denver, 600 miles east along the great overland stage route. Though the report was not true, it had a disastrous effect among the counties along the frontier. Most of the settlers fled to Washington and Clay counties, where they halted and banded together for defense. Many never returned, and most of those that did were not so ambitious to improve their farms as before. "But one of the most diabolical outrages committed by the savages on this border," says J. M. Hagaman, "was the destruction of six hunters in the month of May, 1865. This party left home about the 4th of May, and were last seen by white men near the forks of Buffalo Creek some two days later. The story of their death will never be fully known, as not one of the party survived, and because of the total unreliability of the Indians who massacred them. But a clue, at least, was obtained by the party who found the bodies of the murdered men and gave them burial, of the manner of their death, and as no attempt has ever been made to describe the fearful encounter, we will attempt to do so, although we are compelled to draw largely upon imagination:

"We find the party, composed originally of four brave men—no braver ever lived--encamped on the banks of Brown Creek, in Mitchell County; their outfit consists of a team of ordinary horses, an old wagon, camp equipage, arms and ammunition, each man having a good rifle, one a Spencer, one a Henry, and two muzzle loaders. Besides these, each man had a six-shooter, and all were good marksmen. Buffalo were plenty, and one or more had been slaughtered and the 'saddles' carried to the camp. Suddenly and unexpectedly, a party of Cheyenne Indians appeared at their camp, and commenced rifling it and menacing the hunters, when Lewis Castle, the captain of the party, and an intense Indian hater, fires upon them, wounding or killing an Indian. The Indians flee, and the hunters, aware of their inability to cope with the large number of savages that it was probable could be brought against them, sought safety by flight. That course proved their destruction, for whilst it was possible for them to successfully resist an attack from under such cover as the timber and high creek banks afforded, it was impossible for them to thus resist the impetuous assaults of frenzied savages on the open prairie. But they chose the prairie and met their death manfully, fighting to the last.

"Immediately after the first trouble, the horses were hitched to the wagon, the camp equipment hastily thrown into it, and the brave men started in a northeasterly direction, intending to reach Buffalo Creek as soon as possible, distant from their camp about fifteen miles. Proceeding a few miles unmolested, they came upon two other hunters, sons of William Collens of Lincoln Township. Thus reinforced, their escape seemed probable, when suddenly forty or fifty warriors, armed to the teeth, dashed down upon them, delivering a shower of bullets and arrows at them, and as suddenly wheeling their fleet ponies and riding away at a safe distance. Of the effect of this first attack, of course it is impossible to definitely determine, but that some of the little squad must have been wounded is almost certain. And that they returned the fire is as certain as anything connected with the affair. Again and again was the assault repeated, and again and again was it repulsed. At one time there seems to have been a terrific struggle between the contestants. Pony tracks were thick in the rear, in front, and on both sides of the wagon, and the course of the fleeing men had been nearly reversed. It was, without doubt, a hand-to-hand conflict, but the little band of heroes proved more that a match for their brutal and cowardly assailants, and drove them away again for the eighth or tenth time. In this last encounter, it is probable that at least one Indian got severely hurt, as portious of a dress were found. These and blood spots were seen on the ground. From this time on until within a quarter of a mile of Buffalo Creek and safety, the heroic band were unmolested and would probably have made good their escape, had not an unfortunate accident happened. It was here that one of the linch-pins broke and let one of the hind wheels of the wagon run off, and while replacing it with a wooden pin, the Indians got between them and the creek, and all hope of escape was cut off. The team, too, was sorely jaded, and could make but poor speed at best. Again did the fierce and merciless savages assault them, and drive them from the creek upon the open prairie. From this on the fight was incessant, and at the head of the Little Cheyenne, a small tributary of the Buffalo, the whole party was killed, Castle being the last to surrender, with his head split open with a tomahawk. Thus perished six as good and brave men as this or any other country could boast of, fighting as long as life lasted; dying as only the brave die."

Robberies and outrages of various kinds occurred for several years, commencing with 1860. Horse stealing seemed to be the red man's peculiar weakness. A band of Indians made away with six horses from the Elm Creek settlement in 1865, but were pursued and severely punished, the settlers improving upon the Biblical adage, "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," by taking from the thieves fourteen head of horses and considerable camp equipage besides. In May of this year, the murder by Indians of the six hunters in Republic County, created universal horror and alarm in this section. In August, 1868, Indians made their appearance in the vicinity of Glasco (where the town now stands). Miss Jeannie Paxton was there teaching school, and because of her heroic action, her pupils all reached a house near by, with the exception of one young boy, a son of Hon. H. C. Snyder, who was overtaken, wounded and left for dead. Benjamin White, who lived on Granny Creek, west of Concordia, was killed about the same time, and his daughter, Sarah, taken prisoner. Six months afterwards she was recaptured by General Sheridan in northern Texas. In the spring of 1869 the Cheyennes and Arapahoes again made their appearance. A boy ten years of age, a son of Homer Adkins, living five miles northwest of Concordia, was shot and killed. It was towards evening, and the boy had been sent to look after stock, riding a pony. Neither boy nor pony ever returned. The savages mercilessly murdered the boy in order to steal the pony. At the same time a man named Nelson, a Dane, living near Mr. Adkins, was robbed of his team while plowing in the field. But it is so difficult to separate the Indian troubles of these years and confine them to county limits, that the reader is referred to the State history for a general view of these outrages. All that can be done, in this connection, is to give a few local illustrations of these crimes and outrages, which are fair samples of those occurring all over this portion of Kansas.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

The Legislature of 1860 enacted a statute, prescribing the limits of Cloud County, and appointing F. F. Blake, M. S. Essick and M. Gates, of Clay County, three non-residents, as commissioners. Fortunately the statute became a dead letter. During this same year it was suggested that the county be named Sherman, in honor of John Sherman. But a representative of but little forethought and possessed of a hilarious spirit, proposed the name of a then unsavory character, Jane Shirley, phonetically somewhat similar to John Sherman, which by mistake, rather than design of the members of the Legislature, was adopted. By request, Hon. J. B. Rupe, the first representative, had the name changed. It now bears the name of a gallant Kansas soldier, Col. W. F. Cloud, of the Second Kansas Cavalry. Col. Cloud is now (1882) the Republican nominee for Congress of the Thirteenth Missouri District.

In 1865 the first political convention was held at the house of Moses Heller. It was a joint convention of Republic and Cloud counties, for the purpose of nominating a candidate to defeat G. H. Hollenberg, the nominee of Washington County. The prominent candidates at this convention were J. M. Hagaman, of Cloud, and Rev. R. P. West, of Republic County. The latter secured the nomination, but at the election was defeated by M. Hollenberg. The county was legally organized on the 6th of September, 1866. Moses Heller, G. W. Wilcox and Dr. Lear were appointed County Commissioners; N. D. Hagaman, County Clerk, and Elk Creek was designated as the county-seat, there being no organized town in the county. On the 1st of September the first convention for the nomination of county officers was held at the schoolhouse on Elm Creek. The representation was small, not exceeding forty members. J. M Hagaman opened the convention by nominating Thomas Williamson for Chairman, and making a short speech. Mr. Williamson was elected Chairman, and Matt Wilcox, Secretary. J. M. Hagaman and J. B. Rupe were put in nomination for representatives. Mr. Rupe defined his political position and made prominent note of his being a soldier, which was the means of his election. J. M. Hagaman was elected a delegate to the State Convention, which met at Topeka, September 5. William M. Willcox was nominated for County Clerk; Quincy Honey for Sheriff; Z. Swearingen for Treasurer; Joseph N. Hagaman for Probate Judge; John Fowler, County Assessor; Dr. Lear, County Superintendent of Schools; Lew Fowler, William Smith and William English, Commissioners. Ed. Neely ran independently for Probate Judge and was elected. Moses Heller ran for Commissioner and was elected instead of Mr. Smith. All of the others nominated were elected. The question of the location of the county-seat was voted upon, and by throwing out ten votes, on account of an alleged irregularity, the question was decided in favor of "Rochester," a town situated at the mouth of Oak Creek, two miles east of the present Concordia. A little log hut had been erected, called the court house, and that was all there was of Rochester. The commissioners refused to recognize her claims, and met at Elk Creek, now Clyde, until 1870. The county-seat was then permanently located at Concordia. The county court house is a small one-story frame building, built in the form of a Greek cross, and is situated in the center of a square occupying an eligible position in the flourishing town of Concordia. The square has been beautifully ornamented with shade trees to befit the large stone court house, it is the design to erect in a few years. The county jail is scarcely more deserving of mention than the court house, in which the county records are not well cared for. The poor farm, situated about two miles south of Concordia, is provided with good buildings. The farm has become about self-sustaining.

The political history of Cloud County has had so little diversity, that it is easily summed up. From the organization to the present time the county has been Republican by a large majority. Republicans have filled the offices, with the exception of a few independents who were elected by the opposition and their Republican friends, as they generally were Republicans. The Republicans were the first to organize. At the first convention, held September 5, 1866, nine-tenths of whom were of that faith, the party organized by appointing a county central committee. The official vote of 1880 placed Cloud County sixty-four majority against the Prohibitory Amendment, but when the vote was corrected, it was 193 for the amendment.

SCHOOL STATISTICS, ETC.

The first schoolhouse in the county was built by J. M. Hagaman and John Thorp in 1864, on Elm Creek, in Shirley Township. They were liberal, progressive men, and could not wait the course of law to establish a district and commence a school. On the completion of the building, Miss Rosella Honey was employed, and taught the first school. She was an excellent teacher, giving entire satisfaction to her patrons; one parent valuing the acquirements of his offspring under her instruction at $500. From this time on a great interest has been taken in education, both in the towns and country. There are now 107 organized districts, requiring about 160 teachers, with about 4,000 pupils enrolled. Most of the schools have an adopted course of study, and a number have school libraries, consisting principally of books of reference. It costs now about $15,000 annually to run the schools, and the value of all school property is nearly $100,000. That the schools of Cloud County and of Kansas have in so short a time become so prosperous, is largely due to the large State Endowment Fund, which, when the lands are all sold, will amount to over $15,000,000. Yet this would have been comparatively useless without the energy in education displayed by the people.

The population by last census numbered 13,465 souls. The number of acres of land under cultivation and taxable were 133,091; not under cultivation, 228,136; total 361,227; valuation, $425,000. Number of town lots, 5,963; value, $290,347. Aggregate value of all personal property, $539,748; railroad property, $581,683; total taxable valuation of the county, $2,276,592.

Number of acres of winter wheat, 26,895; rye, 4,194; spring wheat, 3,779; corn, 97,985; broom corn, 447; barley, 17; oats, 4,355; buckwheat, 250; millet, 1,772; Irish potatoes, 1,317; sweet potatoes, 87; sorghum, 854; castor beans, 805; flax, 280; tobacco, 11; cotton, 1.

Bushels of corn on hand, 410,832; tons of hay, 25,245; pounds of cheese, 72,105; butter, 322,784; wool, 54,117.

Number of horses, 6,642; mules, 616; cows, 4,647; cattle, 8,210; sheep, 14,706; swine, 29,112.

Number of trees bearing: apple, 3,302; pear, 150; peach, 56,550; plum, 2,885; cherry, 2,522; not bearing: apple, 46,498; pear, 1,318; peach, 113,655; plum, 5,352; cherry, 11,621.

Four railroads cross the county, thus: The Central Branch of the Kansas Pacific Railroad, built by the Union Pacific, runs east and west across the county, along the Republican River, until that stream turns north into Republic County, from which point it runs in a southwesterly direction, until it strikes the Solomon River in Mitchell County. From the mouth of Buffalo Creek the Scandia Branch continues on up the Republican to the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad in Nebraska. Six miles west of this point the Jewell County Branch starts from Jamestown. The southwestern part of the county has the benefit of the Solomon Valley Branch of the Kansas Pacific, which runs along the Solomon River within Cloud County.

With the exception of the great grasshopper scourge of 1874, Cloud County has not materially suffered from natural calamities, barring the droughts which have, from time to time, scorched the entire State. During that year the early crops were fair, but corn; the late crops and fruits were carried away, almost bodily, by the pestiferous insects. The storm which passed over the county in June, 1878, did considerable damage to crops and weak frame buildings. It came from the northwest, doing most damage at Jewell City. A few years later a storm passed over the southwest corner of the county, doing considerable damage to property at Glasco.

CONCORDIA.

When Concordia was made the county-seat, by vote of the people, in the fall of 1869, there was not a solitary building upon the town site, and the only houses subsequently embraced within its limits, then in existence, were two small structures owned, respectively, by G. W. Andrews and J. M. Hagaman.

At first there were two town companies, Messrs. G. W. Andrews, J. M. Hagaman and S. D. Houston, Sr., comprising one, and J. J. Burns, William McK. Burns, Frank Burns, S. D. Houston and N. H. Billings the other. The former owned the deeded part of the site, and the other what was known as the congressional town site. There were two surveys made, the first in 1869, by G. W. Andrews and J. M. Hagaman. This survey was, however, abandoned and a new one made in the fall of 1870. During the winter of 1869-'70, a small one-story building, 16x20 feet, was erected for county purposes, but the commissioners met in it but twice—the second time adjourning to Clyde. A. A. Carnahan also built a house a little later. It was sold in the summer of 1870 to E. Linney, who opened a store and kept the post-office there. The previous spring, Mr. Linney had opened a store in the abandoned court house. He served as postmaster until the autumn of 1878. Hon. James Strain, of Illinois, was the next person to commence the erection of a house, but the success of the new town did not seem to be assured until the United States Land Office was fairly located here. It opened for business January 16, 1871, a building having been erected at a cost of $2,000. The rush of applicants was tremendous and continued for days. The Gliddens commenced the erection of a hotel about the same time, Hon. C. W. McDonald opened a law office, and in November the Truesdell House was "seen moving over the prairie from the west," and H. Lanoue commenced to operate a saw-mill. The officers of the Land Office were Amos Cutter, of Massachusetts, Register; E. J. Jenkins, Doniphan County, Receiver—a position he still holds. In 1875, Mr. Cutter was succeeded by Mr. McEckron, of Cloud County. It was upon the recommendation of Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, United States Senator, and Hon. Sidney Clarke, Representative in Congress, that the land office was definitely located at this place in October, 1870. Hon. S. D. Houston, one of the members of the old town company, however, was the prime mover in securing the location, which did so much to give Concordia her first business start. McKinnon & Co. opened the first lumber-yard and hardware establishment, and in January, 1871, H. Buckingham moved his Republican Valley Empire from Clyde, and continued its publication at Concordia. Several stores started up about this time, and by the following spring and summer Concordia was firmly established as a thriving business town. In August, 1871, $5,000 in bonds was voted for the erection of a commodious schoolhouse. In December, 1872, the prosperity of the young city was increased by a fire which destroyed $10,000 worth of property—its prosperity was increased because it marked the era of the erection of a better class of buildings, such as Hagaman's Block, Merchant's Block and Union Block.

On the 6th of August, 1872, Concordia was incorporated as a city of the third class, R. E. Allen being the first Mayor. Present city officers (1882): Mayor, Thomas Wrong; Clerk, L. N. Houston; Councilmen, William Conner, W. F. Groesbeck, C. L. Drake, C. W. Whipp, F. LaRocque; Police Judge, A. A. Carnahan; City Marshal, A. W. Whitehead; Chief of the Fire Department, H. M. Spalding. In 1879, the two town companies, previously noticed, were consolidated under the title of "The Concordia Town Association."

The Concordia of 1882 is the largest and most flourishing town of the county; nearly at its center, on the south bank of the Republican River. The site is an admirable one, being sufficiently above the river to be free from overflows and to afford a good system of drainage. From the more elevated portions a commanding view of the surrounding country can be obtained. The great river meandering down the valley, fringed here and there with groves and massive trees, and the far off bordering hills and bluffs that seem to be guarding the valley, during certain portions of the year, compose a picture at once interesting and beautiful.

SCHOOLS, CHURCHES, SOCIETIES AND THE PRESS.

Concordia was settled, as a rule, by Eastern people, who had enjoyed educational advantages, and her school system early showed the good effects of their ideas. Its departments are the primary, intermediate and high school. The work is comprehensive and thorough. The large school building was commenced in August, 1871, and a $5,000 one was erected. Extensive additions have since been made.

The Presbyterian Church was the first established here, their organization dating from June 4, 1871. Their first pastor was Rev. M. P. Jones, who has been succeeded by Rev. Messrs. B. F. Haviland, S. F. Farmer and Horace Bushnell, the present incumbent. They have one of the finest churches in Concordia. Their membership has increased from twenty to over sixty.

The Methodist Church was organized in 1874, with Rev. Mr. Gray as pastor. This denomination has the honor of furnishing the first sermon preached in Concordia. It was delivered in the old land office building by Rev. R. P. West, of Republic County. Rev. Messrs. Talmand, J. C. Dana, George W. Wood and F. L. Tuttle have been the pastors. The church has a good building and parsonage, and 100 members.

The Baptist Church was organized by Rev. J. F. Raridan in February, 1877; October 23, 1881, they dedicated their church edifice, which cost $3,500. Rev. C. H. Nash, the present pastor, succeeded Rev. Mr. Raridan. The membership, which was very small at first, is now seventy.

The Notre Dame Catholic Church was made a branch of the Clay Center Church in 1870. Since 1873 it has had a separate pastor. There are ninety families in the parish. Rev. Joseph Perrier is the priest. The church, built in 1876, cost $9,500, and the parsonage $2,500.

St. John's Lodge, No. 113, A. F. & A. M., was instituted October 11, 1871. The first meeting of Masons in the county was June 24, 1871. First officers: M. D. Sutherlin, W. M.; W. E. Reid, S. W.; A. A. Carnahan, J. W.; J. J. Burns, Treas.; Herbert Patrick, Sec. Their membership has increased from thirteen to seventy-five. Present officers; Benjamin Lake, W. M.; E. J. Carlyle, S. W.; J. C. Gafford, J. W.; J. C. Elliot, Treas., and A. A. Carnahan, Sec.

Concordia Chapter, No. 45, R. A. M., was instituted, as Chapter, April 25, 1881. There are thirty members. Officers: W. E. Reid, H. P.; Ed. Weck, K.; W. C. Patrick, Scribe; A. A. Carnahan, Sec.; J. C. Elliott, Treas.

Concordia Lodge, No. 92, I. O. O. F., was instituted October 8, 1872 First officers; Pius Bean, N. G.; Edmund Martin, V. G.; C. W. McDonald, Sec.; L. J. Crans, Treas. Thomas Wrong, N. G; L. N. Huston, V. G; W. C. Whipp, R. Sec.; J. C. Mossburg, Per Sec.; E. E. Swearingen, Treas.; W. T. Root, Rep. G. L.

Rebekah Degree Lodge, No. 17, I. O. O. F., was instituted October 10, 1877. Officers: Mrs. D. H. Judy, N. G.; Mrs. S. Case, V. G.; Mr. J. Wilson, W.; Mrs. E. E. Swearingen, Sec.

Lincoln Lodge, No. 27, K. of P., was instituted May 6, 1881. J. C. Gafford, C. C.; W. F. Groesbeck, V. C.; L. G. Hull, K. of R. and S.; C. L. Drake, M. of F.; Ed. A. Belisle, M. of E; G. A. Beauchamp, M. at A.

The Endowment Rank (K. of P.) was instituted April 25, 1881.

The Cloud County Temperance Union was organized in May, 1882, with 300 members, for the purpose of sustaining the prohibitory law of Kansas. Pres., F. L. Tuttle; Vice-Pres., J. B. Rupe; Sec., R. S. McCrary.

The Republican Valley Empire, the first newspaper started at Clyde, was established in 1870 by Henry Buckingham. In the following year it was removed to Concordia. It was sold to H. E. Smith in 1872, and has since passed through the hands of Honey & Davis, H. R. Honey, Chaffee & English, and is now owned and edited by C. J. English. Mr. English is a young man, having been born in Nodoway County, Mo., in 1855. He has been a resident of Cloud since 1864, so that the Concordia Empire is edited by a man educated in Cloud County. It is, and always has been, Republican in politics, and is one of the leading journals of the county.

The Concordia Republican was established as the Watchman, at Clyde, in 1871, by Mark J. Kelly. Subsequently revived by J. S. Paradis & Bro.; published for a few months and removed to Concordia in 1875, and the name changed to Concordia Expositor. In January, 1881, it was changed to the Republican. It is owned and edited by W. E. Reid and L. G. Hull. It is Republican and religious; the only one in the county with a religious inclination.

The Cloud County Blade was established April 23, 1879, by J. M. & J. E. Hagaman. It was at first only a 6x9 inch folio, a little larger than a respectable sized hand-bill. In July it was enlarged to a six column folio; in September to seven, and in 1880 to its present size, an eight column folio. It has a good circulation, and is independent in politics.

HOTELS, BANKS, ETC.

The Commercial House, one of the leading hotels of Northern Kansas, was built by Elson Crill in 1873. Additions were afterward made by himself and E. D. Crandall, who became part proprietor. Mr. Crandall retired in October, 1882. The Commercial House, as it stands, is a solidly constructed stone building, three stories and basement in height, 76x50 feet dimensions. It contains fifty-five rooms, well furnished, and obtains the bulk of the commercial travel. The entire property is valued at $15,000. There are several other small hotels and boarding-houses here, but the Commercial House takes the lead.

There are three banking houses in Concordia—the Cloud County Bank, N. B. Brown & Co. and Concordia State Bank. The first, owned by Eastern capitalists, has the finest bank building, and represents the most capital. It was established in 1880; T. B. Smith, president, and F. T. Atwood, cashier. N. B. Brown and J. C. Elliott own the second mentioned, which is the oldest, and is considered a safe and reliable bank. It was established in 1878. The Concordia State Bank was established in 1880; W. C. McDonald is president, and H. R. Honey cashier. Its capital is quite large. At present it is in a small rented building, but the design is soon to erect a suitable one.

The Concordia Mills, owned by H. Lanoue, G. R. Letourneau, A. Berard, A. Gosselin and E. Gustineau, was first started in 1872 by Mr. Laneaue as a steam grist-mill, but changed to water-power in 1874. The Republican River is not well suited for damming, its banks being low and the bottom quicksand. In 1875, 120 feet of the dam was carried away, and the following year another portion went out, which compelled him to form a company. At an expense of about $70,000, with repairs and improvements, they have secured one of the best dams on the river. There are five run of burrs, with seven feet head, and enough water to run twenty burrs and the necessary machinery throughout the year.

The Republican Valley Agricultural and Stock Fair Association was organized in the fall of 1881, with $20,000 stock. They have an excellent tract of land, east of Concordia, with a half-mile race course and necessary buildings. The fairs have been very successful.

The coal fields of Republic County and the northern part of Cloud are of great value to Concordia, for they furnish the principal part of her fuel at a reasonable price.

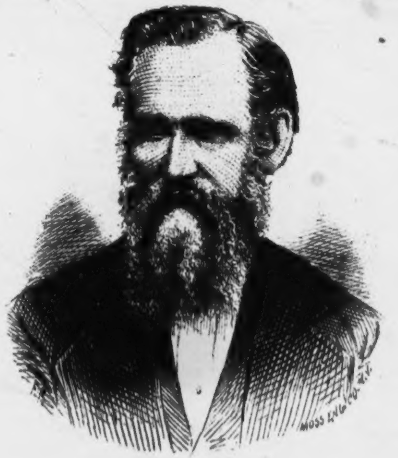
L. J. CRANS, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., February 26, 1826. He descended from a German family, which was among the earliest settlers of Orange County, N. Y. He pursued the principal course at the Central High School of Philadelphia, which institution conferred on him the degree of A. M. After graduating he studied law, and conveyancing for five years, and was admitted to practice in the common pleas court at Clearfield, Pa., in August, 1850. The same year he was nominated by the Democratic party for District Attorney, and unanimously elected. In 1853, he was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and in July, 1854, to practice in the Supreme Court of the United States. He was married at Philadelphia, July 21, 1847, to Miss Margaret A. Peterson, whose ancestors were Pembertons, who came over with Penn and Petersons, early Swedish settlers in Delaware. They have six children—William E., Charlie, Merwin, Clotilda P., Margaret A., and Frank W., who were all born in Clearfield, Pa. He was a Douglas Democrat. After the breaking out of the rebellion, at the request of Gov. Curtin, he was active in getting forces in the field, and on the 4th of July, in an oration he delivered he traced the history of the doctrine of secession and exposed its fallacy. A severe and protracted illness, causing an anchylosed knee, prevented his going into service with the force to which he was attached. In the spring of 1871, Mr. Crans removed with his family to Concordia, Cloud Co., Kan., where he has since continued in the practice of his profession—his practice having extended over the northern tier of counties. Having been familiar with the common law, he became a concise and careful pleader under the Code. When addressing the court he is brief, and seldom cites authorities unless the question is new, or his position doubted. When before the jury he uses plain, forcible, logical arguments, appealing to their reason, rather than their feelings, and being possessed of a retentive memory he, without referring to notes, covers the facts as disclosed by the evidence. It is related of him that, in defending in an action of ejectment for land on which his clients had a valuable mill-dam, tried before the younger Judge Burnside, on account of the rulings during the trial, he devoted the most of the hour allotted to argument in discussing the facts. This colloquy then occurred between the court and the counsel:



MOSS ENG CO. N.Y.

L J Crans.

Judge B.—"Mr. Crane, you have but eight minutes left of your hour, and although you have submitted a number of points, the court has heard nothing from you on the law of the case." As Mr. Crane turned to the judge he continued: "In order to facilitate matters the court will intimate how it will charge. As to your first point—'The marks on the ground constitute the survey and control the return,' we will tell the jury such is the law. As to your second point—'In making a resurvey it is improper for the deputy-surveyor to remark old lines;' we will tell the jury there is neither law nor common sense in it."

Mr. C.—"I conceive your Honor will commit error in so charging. Will you hear any authorities on the point?"

Judge B.—"What; can you produce any authority for so ridiculous a proposition?"

Mr. C.—"Your Honor; I never make any proposition in court for which I do not have an authority, or what seems to me to be an authority. Shall I read some?"

Judge B.—"Yes! I would like to know what judge under the heavens ever made such a fool of himself as to enunciate such twaddle as law."

Mr. C.—"The first case I cite is Collins vs. Barclay, 7 Barr, Page 73; the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court is delivered by your honor's father, and is in these words: 'In making a resurvey it is improper for the deputy-surveyor to remark old lines,' (applause from audience), 'because it leads to fraud and confusion.'" (Renewed applause.)

Judge B.—"Mr. Crane, will you please pass that book up to me?"

Mr. C.—"Shall I read other authorities I have here?"

Judge B.—"I will charge the jury in the language of this book."

The cause was gained, and afterwards affirmed by the Supreme Court.

In addition to his drug store he owns his own dwelling and fifteen acres of land adjoining the town of Concordia, and eight dwelling lots. Thus can be seen what a man can do by diligent enterprise and perseverance. He was married September 4, 1881, in Leavenworth, Kan., to Miss Savoie Manver.

HON. JAMES MANNEY HAGAMAN. The subject of this biography, one of the early pioneers of Cloud County, was born at Tribes Hill, New York State, July 31, 1830. His father was a private in the war of 1812, and was of German descent, and was killed in an altercation in Cloud County, Kan., July 11, 1868. Mr. Hagaman can boast of only three years' sojourn in the common schools, but being a great reader and ambitious he has won for himself distinction as an able man with his pen and in debate. Studied law a short time in 1849. In 1851, went to Wisconsin, where he was rafting, hunting and trapping until 1855, when he married Miss Mary L. Webster, who has borne him five girls and two boys. From the last date he followed the trade of a carpenter until 1860, when he removed to Kansas, reaching Cloud County the 8th of July. He homesteaded a part of the present site of Concordia. He is the oldest settler now in the county, and has perhaps done more for the county than any other man, being the most conspicuous character in the county to-day. During the Indian trials he rendered the settlers valuable service for which he was made lieutenant of Company C, Seventeenth Kansas Militia. He was representative from Cloud County to the legislature in 1868, and was the first delegate from Cloud County, to the State Republican convention. In 1871, was admitted to practice law in the State. He has written an extensive history of the county. In 1869, he and his son James E. established The Blade. It was at first a 6x9 (in.) folio, but has become to be one of the largest papers in the county. He is a man of energy and great force of character. His religious tenets are well known to be not in accordance with those generally accepted by the members of any Christian church; yet, in all good works, he joins hands with his fellow-citizens, and is counted a Christian of the strictest sect in deed, although denying the word.

CLYDE.

Clyde situated on the Republican, in the eastern part of the county, is the oldest town in the county, and considering it has been without the influence and aid of the county-seat and United States Land Office it has made the most rapid and substantial growth of any town in Cloud. This is due to the energy and intelligence of her citizens. It is the second town in size in Cloud, and is surrouded by a rich agricultural district.

It was here on Elk Creek that the first settlements of the county was made, and it was for a long time the designated point of assembly for settlers west, when there were Indian raids. Many of the early settlers west of this point would here leave their families, and go into Republic County as far up as White Rock to locate and work their claims. It was also at first the county-seat, but being at one side of the county had no hope of retaining it after the western part of the county had become settled. It has an excellent location, and is destined to be a large and flourishing inland town.

The original town site consisted of forty acres, purchased from W. H. Page for $300 by a town site company, consisting of Andrew Smith, Ed Neeley, J. B. and F. B. Rupe, Lew and John Fowler, Dave Heller, C. J. Cowel, Charles Davis and B. V. Honey. It was laid out in 1866, but before this, Chauncy Cowel and Charles Davis had opened a country store in the house of Moses Heller, which may be considered the commencement of business in Clyde. In this store the first meeting was held, to talk over the feasibility or propriety of starting a town. At the forming of the regular town association, the following were members: F. B. Rupe, C. J. Cowel, C. Davis, Q. Honey, B. V. Honey, R. L. Fowler, J. S. Fowler, W. H. Page, Moses Heller, D. Heller, D. Turner, J. McClure, R. P. West, S. S. Way and Ed Neeley. They held their first meeting December 11, 1866, and elected Q. Honey, president; B. V. Honey, Vice-President; J. B. Rupe, Secretary; Charles Davis, treasurer. The shares were first held at $20 a piece. At the meeting held in January, 1867, three names were presented by which to christen the new town—Elkhorn, Shirley and Colfax. Shirley carried away the honors, but the members thought best to reconsider their action, and so during the next month, they voted again and chose the name of Clyde. In January, 1866, Cowel & Davis opened the first store in town, before it had a name. Soon afterwards, Simons & Peters opened a second store, but sold out to the first-named firm. The next store was not established by Ed. Neeley and S. Way until in the spring of 1867, when the latter erected the first frame building, where Judge L. W. Borton's residence now stands. The first school was taught in the fall of 1866, by Dr. Rodgers. Rev. R. P. West, of the Methodist Episcopal denomination, preached the first sermon at the house of Moses Heller in the fall of 1863, which, however, was not in Clyde, as it was not then in existence, but it was delivered where Clyde now stands. The first marriage in the county occurred here in 1866, the contracting parties being W. M. Wilcox and Miss Rosella Honey, who taught the first school.

The growth of the town was very slow for a few years, but it has been steady and substantial, with perhaps, the exception of the year succeeding the grasshopper visitation, when it rather decreased in population. To-day there are a large number of substantial and ornamental business houses, and the shells that are the commencement of every town are fast disappearing. The resident portion of the town contains a number of elegant houses, and the appearance in general is wonderfully taseful, neat and homelike. Considering the disadvantages she has had to contend with, Clyde has made remarkable progress. But it has secured a start and a position that will always make it at least the second town in the county. It now has the advantage of two railroads—the Central Branch of the Union Pacific, and the Junction City Branch of the Kansas Pacific, which now has control of the former road. With these roads, the vast water-power of the Republican, its favorable location in a rich agricultural district and its intelligent and energetic class of citizens, Clyde will always remain a prominent inland town.

LOCAL MATTERS.

Clyde was incorporated as a city of the third class in the spring of 1873; her first municipal election being held on the 7th of April of that year. First officers: George W. Bartlett, mayor; Peter McCord, police judge; Frank McNulty, A. W. Campbell, Moses Heller, S. M. Ransopher and Henry Dobbs, councilmen. Officers for 1882: Mayor—W. S. Cannon; Councilmen—C. F. Armstrong, S. M. Ransopher, A. G. Derse, Wm. Brown and W. J. Nye; Clerk—E. R. DeBray; Treasurer—Martin Patrie; Police Judge—Geo. W. Barnes; City Attorney—J. J. McFarlan; Captain of the Fire Department—E. T. Peck. The department consists of a brisk volunteer force and a hook-and-ladder truck.

The post-office was established in 1865. Moses Heller was the first postmaster, succeeded by W. T. Batty, and he in turn by E. T. Peck. The office is a third class.

The Elk Creek settlement was about four years behind the Elm Creek in the matter of schools. Doubtless this was due to the fact that the former was not so prolific of children as the latter. One of the old settlers has stated that next to the Indians, "old baches," were considered nuisances, and were not welcomed as settlers, since it was well argued that they were the means of postponing the establishment of a school, which event depended, of course, upon the number of children in the district. Early in the spring of 1866, there was a meeting at Moses Heller's, for the purpose of discussing the interests of education in the community, and devising means, if possible, for the building of a schoolhouse. They determined to build a good one, as they believed that the settlement would soon require it. The site agreed upon was the lot on which now stands Dr. Campbell's house; the size of the building, 16x22 feet, to be built of hewn logs, dirt roof and cottonwood flooring. Each settler agreed to contribute four dollars in work. The design was to have it ready for occupancy early in the summer, but it was the 14th of July before it was ready to be raised. The raising was connected with a pic-nic, which made it an enjoyable affair. It was not completed, however, until the following winter. Dr. Rodgers was the first teacher. This schoolhouse served as a church, public hall and court house, and the commissioners first met here to transact county business. Its day of usefulness has long since passed, and in its place a fine $10,000 brick structure, containing six large rooms, and all the modern improvements for convenience, comfort and health. Instead of ten or fifteen pupils, there are now 300, and five teachers instead of one. The school is a credit and ornament to the town, besides an institution of profit.

This settlement, and the county in fact, were exceptionally slow in establishing religious worship, as the first sermon was not preached until the fall of 1863. This sermon was delivered by Rev. R. P. West, of Republic County, at the house of Moses Heller, about four years after the first settlement. It was not till three years later that a church was established, and a Sabbath-school was not commenced until 1864 or '65.

In the spring of 1866 the Methodists organized. They are the oldest, the most numerous, and occupy the finest church in the town.

The Clyde Baptist Church was organized by Rev. H. S. Cloud, on the 10th of January, 1857. This church has grown steadily, and now, with a large membership, owns a spacious and neat church edifice.

The Presbyterians organized in 1870, or at least steps were then taken in that direction by Rev. Mr. Chapin, who resided at Irving. The church has a goodly membership, and a good church building. These churches are all in a flourishing condition. Their pastors are able, faithful and untiring in their effort in instilling into the minds of their flocks, words of truth and precepts of morality.

The Clyde Herald was established at Clyde in 1878, by Batty & Bachelder. The office was burned in February, 1881, and was suspended until July. In March, 1882, it was purchased by J. S. Paradis. It is a seven column folio, Republican in politics, a newsy and well-edited paper. The Clyde Democrat was established the 24th of July, 1880, by Haukohl. In June, 1881, Thomas Owen, Jr., purchased an interest in the paper. It was at first a six column folio, but changed to seven in November, 1880. It has a fair circulation, is Democratic in politics, and for prohibition. The Jamestown Herald was established in 1880.

Travelers find the hotel accommodations of Clyde superior to those of most towns of its size. The leading hostelries are the Pomeroy House and the Commercial Hotel. The Pomeroy House was erected in 1878, and came into possession of its present proprietors, Messrs. F. E. & J. H. Barons, in November, 1879. The hotel has thirty rooms, neatly furnished, and its accommodations are first-class. These gentlemen also own a fine elevator, and 100 acres of valuable land adjoining. The Commercial House, conducted by George H. Wilkes, was opened in April, 1879.

The bank of Clyde, owned by Van De Mark brothers, is the only banking house in the place at present. It enjoys the confidence of the people, and does an excellent business. It represents a capital of $40,000.

The only manufactures of note are those of flour and pottery. The Clyde Mill Co. have just completed a steam flouring-mill, costing about $15,000. Sohlinger & Mosier are the proprietors of the pottery that produces an excellent and durable ware. This is destined soon, to be one of the most extensive industries of the town.

The association has forty acres enclosed, supplied with necessary buildings and an excellent half mile race course. Officers: C. W. Van De Mark, president; M. Petrie, secretary; E. T. Peck, treasurer.

Clyde Lodge No. —— I. O. O. F. was instituted March 25, 1878. There are about forty members. Officers: M. W. Carney, N. G.; L. B. Haynes, V. G.; G. W. Hay, Secretary; P. McDonald, Treasurer; T. K. Teter, Deputy Grand Master.

Mr. Misele relates many thrilling incidents of his early life in Kansas, one of which is as follows: One day in August, 1868, he and his brother were overtaken by three Indians. The leader was dressed in female attire, and the boys were not aware of their purpose until too late to escape from them. One seized hold of the younger brother, and pulling him upon a pony rode off toward the river. The others tried to lift Robert upon a pony, but he resisted so strongly, that they gave up the attempt, and contented themselves with dragging him along. Loosing their hold for a moment, the boy broke away, and ran toward the river. The Indian then drew a revolver; at first it snapped, the second time he was more successful, and shot, wounding Robert slightly. The boy fell upon his face, and as he lay there, he heard two shots fired, and heard his brother groan. Then he sprang to his feet and made for the river. The Indians shot several arrows after him, and one of them passed through his sleeve, but he escaped without further injury, and brought help from his home to his wounded brother.

MITCHELL COUNTY.

LOCATION AND NATURAL FEATURES.

MITCHELL County is situated in the northern part of the State, and is bounded on the north by Jewell County; on the east by Cloud and Ottawa; on the south by Lincoln, and on the west by Osborne.

The Solomon River flows into the county from the northwest corner, and passes through it in an easterly direction, bearing enough south to leave the county at about the center of its east line. The river is quite a rapid stream in this county, and furnishes many mill privileges along its course. Its tributaries are long, well-timbered streams. Commencing in the northwest, Oak Creek comes first, then Granite, the Limestones, Brown's Creek, Mulberry, Plum and the Asher creeks on the north side of the river; while on the south the streams are not quite so long, but are all well timbered. In regular order, from west to east, comes the South Fork, Carr Creek, Hard Scrabble, Walnut Creek, Turkey Creek, Indian Creek, Laban Creek, Marshall Creek and Fourth Creek. Through the south part of the county runs Salt Creek, with its many large tributaries, making Mitchell one of the best watered counties in the State.

The soil is a rich loam, and in the valleys is very deep. Twenty-five per cent of the county is bottom land, and a little over two per cent is native forest. The surface of the country is undulating. Several varieties of wild grasses were growing here when the settlers first began to arrive. They have given place, however, to cultivated grasses, and now only two of the native varieties are common, viz.: Buffalo grass and blue stem. The first is a short, succulent sort of moss, which grows by being trampled upon and broken; hence the name of its former chief cultivator attaches to it. At each point where broken by the hoof of the buffalo, it extends a runner like that of the strawberry vine, and immediately sets another root. Since the millions of buffalo have been driven from the plains, this grass is giving place to the tall blue stem. The buffalo grass is the first to appear in the spring, and grows rapidly until a thick mat of solid green coats the ground. It dies or cures before the 1st of July. The blue stem is the grass most available for hay, and often grows to a height of eight feet; but is ready for the stack at about twenty inches.

Many acres of blue grass are now in good growing condition in the county, but it is quite difficult to make any tame grass take root in the wild ground.

The most general, and for all purposes the most profitable, crop in this county is corn. Wheat and rye are also a favorite with many, and in 1882 the yield of all these cereals was large. Spring wheat is not much in favor among the farmers of this county, although about 2,500 acres were harvested, which yielded 35,000 bushels. The number of acres of corn planted this season was 74,437, and the yield amounts to 2,223,110 bushels. The number of acres of rye in this county was 8,000, which averaged twenty bushels per acre. Over 200,000 bushels of oats were raised, and the average yield was forty bushels per acre; 602 acres of sorghum were planted, and the yield amounts to 54,180 gallons of syrup. The broom corn crop is one of the sure and profitable ones, and in 1882 this county planted 8,683 acres, which yielded 3,040 tons. The wool clip of Mitchell for 1882 was 91,000 pounds, which will be greatly increased in 1883, as several thousand head of sheep have been brought into the county this fall. Over $18,000 worth of poultry and eggs were shipped from the county in 1882; 310,000 pounds of butter were manufactured during the year ending March 1, 1882. In the south part of the county many salt springs are found. The largest one, however, is the Great Spirit's Spring, in Cawker Township, Section 35. This spring is being improved by a company of Eastern gentlemen, who intend to make it a resort for invalids. The water of this spring possesses medicinal properties which in time will make the property valuable.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS AND INDIAN TROUBLES.

In the fall of 1867 a few settlers moved into the county, and in the spring of 1868 several log houses were built along the river, from the east line to a point where Solomon Rapids is now located. It is, perhaps, safe to state that the first actual white settler in Mitchell County was Joseph Decker, who early in 1866 located on the Charles Davis farm, north of the village of Glen Elder. Mr. Decker filed on this quarter section of land at the Junction City Land Office, and came on with quite a large herd of cattle and built a dug-out and broke a little spot for garden. Before fall the Indians drove off his cattle, and he abandoned the country.

Among the earliest permanent settlers were Hon. John Reese, of Asherville, Thomas Howie and William Joiner, just below the forks of Asher Creek; Matthias Nelson, David Bogardus and B. Bell at the mouth of Plum Creek; Whit McConnell and Tunis Bulis, between Asher and Plum creeks, on the river; James Farow and James Duff, just above Plum Creek, on the river; near where Beloit was afterwards located, H. A. Bell and John Whitehurst and his sons, Vinton and Abraham; and at Solomon Rapids, John Smith. Early in the spring of 1868 nearly all of these settlers were making primitive improvements, from the east line of the county west as far as Solomon Rapids.

At the mouth of Marshall Creek the family of Abram Marshall, consisting of himself, wife, two grown sons and two daughters, were living and building a dam for the future improvement of the Solomon. Two miles north, Charles Welch and B. F. Moody were building a dug-out and breaking prairie. Rumors of Indians in the neighborhood occasionally reached their ears, but the settlers gave little heed, except to picket their stock a little closer to camp and prepare to protect themselves and their property against these small bands of thieves, as they were then considered. During the early part of the summer several teams were stolen along the valley, and in August the Cheyennes and Sioux, or roving bands of outlaws from each, came into the valley and called at the house of A. A. Bell, where the city of Beloit now stands. After a long parley, the Indians passed down the valley, and the settlers becoming alarmed, also started east to round up at Thomas Howie's, on Asher Creek. The Indians hung about the mouth of Plum and Asher creeks for several days, when they called at the house of B. Bell, and, calling him and David Bogardus from the log-house, shot them dead. They then compelled Mrs. B. Bell to mount a pony and start down the river with them. Two children of A. A. Bell—Maggie, aged six years, and Esther, aged eight—were also captured. Mrs. B. Bell rode only about 300 yards from the house where her husband had been killed, when she jumped from the pony and started back. The Indians not having the time to spare to recapture her, turned and fired a volley at her; one bullet struck her in the breast, and she fell, and this band of Indians left her. She was found by the settlers and taken to Thomas Howie's, where she lived in terrible agony, without the care of a physician, for three weeks.

On the 17th of August a young son, aged fourteen years, of Mr. Hewett, who had settled on Brown's Creek, came into the stockade in a most deplorable condition, and reported that the Indians had killed his father three days before and wounded him. He was properly cared for and recovered. His sister now lives in Osborne County, where his mother afterwards located. Company G of the Seventh Cavalry, then stationed at Fort Harker, received orders to make a reconnoisance in the direction of the Solomon Valley, with a view to the protection of the settlers, and on their way over, their scouts came across this party of Indians who had the Bell children prisoners. The soldiers pressed them so closely that they abandoned the children on the high prairie, where they were afterward found and returned to their parents at the Howie stockade. Miss Maggie Bell is now living with her parents in Decatur County; while her sister, Esther, is Mrs. J. B. Dunlap, who resides in Bloomfield Township, in Mitchell County.

While the settlers of the valley were being "rounded up," by the different bands of Indians at this time, the two sons of Abram Marshall, accompanied by a man named Thompson, left the stockade at Howie's and went over to their dug out, at the mouth of the creek which bears their name, to secure the provisions which had been left there. On their way they saw a lone Indian come out of the underbrush which skirts the river on the north side. They gave chase, and the Indian led them in a northeasterly direction, nearly toward the stockade, but, on reaching the bluffs, turned abruptly to the north, up a ravine, where they were confronted by a band of thirty-five Indians, who opened fire upon Thompson and the Marshall brothers, killing them instantly.

The company of soldiers, under Lieut. De Rudio, who had found the daughters of Aaron Bell, arrived on the banks of the Solomon, near the mouth of Asher Creek, and went into camp in the afternoon. About sunset two Indians rode out of the timber and boldly approached the horses of the company, tied to the picket rope, and, selecting De Rudio's horse, untied it and started across the broad river bottom in a northwesterly direction. One of the Indians who had taken the Lieutenant's horse was mounted on a fleet sorrel pony, and the other, who kept quite a distance ahead, rode a large and powerful mule, probably stolen from some of the settlers. Orderly Sergeant Harris was the first in the saddle, and the leader in the chase of four miles to the bluffs, where the schoolhouse now stands. Here the Indian on the pony dismounted, and, throwing a spear into the flank of his pony, mounted the Lieutenant's horse and easily escaped.

The stockade at Asher Creek that winter was one of the liveliest places in the far West. Many of the settlers previously mentioned wintered there, and were joined by George Ealand, William Holton, John Cushing and John Owen, who was a trapper then, now a substantial farmer of Osborne County. John Owen was elected commander of the stockade because of his frontier experience. He protested strongly against this promotion, but was unanimously chosen, and during the night packed his traps and fled from this forced civilization, and went to the head waters of the Cimaron, in the panhandle of Northern Texas, to hunt and trap alone.

The soldiers came West to a point two miles south of Cawker City that fall, and built a block house on the bank of the Solomon, which was abandoned shortly after, and early in 1869 Dr. Rose, of Junction City, filed on this tract of land and came to make settlement in the early spring. He remained on the claim but a short time, when he discovered roving bands of Indians in several different directions. He was expecting his family, who were then on the road. Writing a hasty history of the situation on the block house door, he started down the valley in the darkness to meet his family and turn them back. His body was afterward found on the hill west of Glen Elder. A pile of stones marks the spot where he met his death.

Later in 1869 and during the winter of 1870, many settlers located claims, and the Government established a post west of the Great Spirit's Springs, on the north bank of the river, to which Battery B of the Fourth United States Artillery was assigned, commanded by Capt. H. C. Hasbrouck. Later this company was relieved by G Troop of the Seventh United States Cavalry, under command of Lieut. C. C. De Rudio, Second Lieut. McIntosh, a full-blooded Chippewa Indian, being second in command, April, 1870, and the raids of the Indians were not quite so frequent. They were not wholly deterred at once from trips into the valley, for on May 9, a party of Cheyennes and Arapahoes came down Oak Creek, and near the county line came across a party composed of Lew J. Best, John Hatcher, R. G. F. Kshinka and John A. Seger, from the young settlement of Cawker City, who were looking up valuable tracts for settlers, and "rounded them up" in a buffalo wallow for several hours. The party of four were well armed, and by lying close to the ground and keeping up a continual firing at any advancing Indians, kept them at bay for four hours. Lew J. Best was wounded by a stray bullet in that portion of his anatomy most exposed while lying prone upon the ground. The Indians, finding the party difficult of capture, abandoned them and passed east to the Limestone, and down that creek until they came upon the little settlement at Glen Elder, where they killed Solomon Meiser, John Geer and Mr. Kenyon. The bodies of these men were found in the river, a few yards below where the mill now stands. Mr. Geer was killed by a stroke in the forehead with a tomahawk, and was lying on a sand bar where the road crosses the stream; Kenyon was shot with a revolver, and Meiser was pierced by seven arrows, which were still sticking in his body.

The settlers fled in different directions, but nearly all found shelter at the stockade erected on the farm of George W. Stinson. Among those who sought shelter at that time were Hon. D. C. Everson, John Neve, Milton Spencer, Scott Guffy and many others. The troops came down from Spirit's Springs, and the Indians fled, one party going north, and the other southwest, to the plains. Twenty days later they again appeared near Cawker City, and were reconnoitering the camp of troops on the river. Uncle John Seger was alone in the little town of Cawker, which then consisted of one house and a sod stable, and the Indians—some thirty in number—not knowing how many persons might be concealed in the stable, declined to attack it. The whole force of settlers were then several miles down the valley hauling lumber and a saw-mill from the railroad. Uncle John clad himself in different suits of clothes belonging to the parties who were away at work, and appeared before the Indians first in one suit and then another, personating different men, until he apparently convinced them that the sod stable was filled with brave whites, who desired a parley. That night ten horses were stolen from the ranch of Best & Hatcher, on Oak Creek, two miles west of Cawker, while nearly a dozen men were concealed in the house, silent but passive witnesses to their own robbery. The final attempt to reclaim this beautiful valley for the buffalo and the Indian was made by a party of dusky raiders July 2d. It proved unsuccessful, and civilization triumphed. The buffalo made one more attempt July 5th, 1872, when a straggler from the main herd came through Cawker City, then a flourishing village of 250 inhabitants; and was killed on the main street, dying near the scales just in front of where Mead & Tandy's store now stands.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION AND ELECTIONS.

Early in 1870 the county, as described in the beginning of this sub-division, was decided to have sufficient population to demand an organization. The county had been named in honor of Capt. William D. Mitchell, who enlisted in the Union army during the late rebellion as a private soldier in the Second Kansas Cavalry, and after promotion to captain, was killed in the battle at Monroe's Cross Roads in North Carolina, on the 10th of March, 1865.

A meeting of the special board of County Commissioners appointed by the Governor, was held October 4, 1870. These commissioners were, J. M. Myers, William E. Schooley and Charles L. Brown; Don A. Peaslee clerk. At that meeting the county was divided into voting precincts as follows:

Asherville, No. 1, to be composed of Townships 6-7-8, in Range 6, with voting place at the dwelling of John Reese.

Beloit, No. 2, to be composed of Townships 6-7-8 in Range 7, and the voting place to be at the stone house in Beloit.

Solomon Rapids, No. 3, to be composed of Townships 6-7-8, in Range 8, and the voting place to be at the house of R. C. Clark.

Glen Elder, No. 4, to be composed of Townships 6-7-8, Range 9, with voting place at the house of George W. Stinson.

Cawker, No. 5, to be composed of Townships 6-7-8, in Range 10, with voting place at Cawker City.

Salt Creek, No. 6, to be composed of Township 9. Ranges 6-7-8-9-10, with the voting place at the house of J. A. Markley on Fourth Creek.

No. 1 was afterwards divided as per Congressional Townships, Township 6 being called Lulu; Township 7, Asherville; Township 8, Logan; Township 9, Eureka. Beloit precinct was divided, and Township 6, named Plum Creek; 7, Beloit; 8, Bloomfield, and 9, Salt Creek. Solomon Rapids was cut up, and Turkey Creek, Center and Round Springs made from that range of townships. Glen Elder, made Walnut Creek, Hayes and Blue Hills; Cawker precinct furnished Carr Creek and Pittsburg, with Custer in the extreme southwest.

The first election resulted in the choice of the following County Officers: Commissioners, C. L. Brown, William E. Schooley, Lew. J. Best; Clerk, Laf. C. Smith; Probate Judge, James Britt; Sheriff, W. B. Smith; County Attorney, Don. A. Peaslee; Treasurer, H. J. Messenger; Superintendent of Public Instruction, J. W. Elliott; Coroner, J. W. Clark; Representative, E. Harrison, Cawker.

Since this first election, the representatives in the State Legislature have been in regular order. John Reese of Asherville, John Curtain of Beloit, D. C. Everson of Glen Elder, Harry Babcock of Walnut Creek, W. J. L. Warning of Center, Horace Cooper, Charles J. Brown, Capt. F. Charlesworth of Beloit, and John M. Kyle, of Carr Creek.

In the winter of 1880, the county was divided into two representative districts, the western district being composed of Solomon Rapids and all the territory west of the west line of that township. Mitchell County managed to get along without the usual unpleasant county-seat contest, or at least without the unpleasantness commonly engendered. Beloit was selected by a vote of nearly two to one over all other competitors (see history of Beloit).

A court house building was needed at once, and T. F. Hersey built one in 1871 and presented it to the county. The building cost Mr. Hersey about $4,000, and was amply sufficient for the county at that time. The county built a jail shortly after, at an expense of $800; although it cost its builders as much in proportion as the court house, it has as yet never proved of much avail. About the only prisoners ever confined therein, were a couple of alleged horse thieves, who stole the extra blankets provided by kind hearted Sheriff Hatcher, took out the horrid grates which obscured the window, and passed through the orifice out into a purer sphere. They have never been heard from, and the frugal janitor of the court house appropriated the hole to toss coal through for winter consumption in the various county offices.

The county business at present (1882), is in charge of the following officers: Commissioners, W. L. Record, First District; J. S. McGrath, Second District; Samuel Depoy, Third District; Treasurer, James L. Buchanan; Clerk, George W. Clark; Sheriff, W. H. Langford; County Attorney, A. H. Ellis; Register of Deeds, W. T. Yates; Clerk of District Court, W. S. Search; Probate Judge, John Mehl; Superintendent of Public Instruction, M. J. Wilcox; Coroner, Joseph Riley.

SCHOOLS, RAILROADS AND OTHER MATTERS.

The rapid settlement and growth of the county led to a rapid formation of school districts and erection of schoolhouses. The county is now sub-divided into 106 districts, with suitable buildings in each for school purposes; there are 4,574 pupils of school age; 3,789 of which are enrolled, and the average yearly attendance for the year ending August 1, 1 . amounted to 2,461 pupils. One hundred and thirty-two teachers were employed, and the amount expended for school purposes during that year reached the sum of $23,519.38. Rev. O. N. Fletcher, a Baptist minister, taught the first school in the county, in the little settlement of Beloit. Although this was the first school in the county, before the term closed, not less than a dozen others were in progress in different parts of the county.

The Central Branch Railroad was built through the county in the summer of 1879, and received the bonds of the county in the sum of $50,000 in aid thereof. The Solomon Valley Railway, a branch of the Kansas Pacific division of the Union Pacific, also extended its line from Solomon City on the Kansas Pacific to the county-seat of Mitchell. Both roads then passing into the hands of one management, further extension through the county became unnecessary, and the work on the Solomon Valley line was stopped at Beloit.

Mitchell, like many other of the western counties of Kansas, suffered from the ravages of the grasshoppers in 1874, and many settlers left the county in order to provide food for themselves during the winter. Much assistance was rendered the needy settlers through the organized State and county societies, for the distribution of Eastern charity. Good crops in 1875 and 1876, however, brought back the population which the county had lost, and Mitchell again commenced to prosper. This county is well settled, nearly every quarter section being under a degree of improvement. The abundance of good building rock has led to the erection of a class of buildings, both farm and business houses, which are both beautiful and substantial.

During the year in which the railroad was built through the county, its advancement in wealth was very rapid. The following is the property valuation as returned by the March assessment for the year 1882.

The milling interest is perhaps the most important manufacturing industry in the county, and the Solomon River affords an abundance of water and plenty of fall. Beginning at the east line of the county, and in fact on the county line, at the little village of Simpson is located Simpson's mill, with two run of stones and a strong power. This is one of the oldest mills in the county. Five miles west of the line is the stone grist-mill of B. W. Tanquary, with four run of stones, built in 1874, by Williams & Finnigan, of Beloit. This mill has a large business, running night and day. The property is valued at $18,000. The next mill on the river is grown from the one started by T. F. Hersey, at Beloit, in 1869; further reference will be made to this property in the history of Beloit. Six miles west of Beloit is another custom-mill, known as the Jamison Bros.' Mill, it has two run of burrs and plenty of custom work. The property is valued at $6,000. At Glen Elder, Kaull & Nash have a flouring-mill, with three run of stone, doing a large business. This mill was built in 1871, by Neve & Spencer, and is now one of the most valuable establishments of the kind in the west part of the State. Three miles south of Cawker City, T. F. Hersey located his homestead, and commenced building a mill in 1872, in company with Hon. John Curtin. They labored under many difficulties on account of frequent floods, but in 1873 the dam was completed, and the mill has been in operation ever since. The mill operates four run of stone, and is valued at $15,000. On the west line of the county the Jackson Bros. have a splendid milling property built in 1875, and doing a vast business. The property is valued at $15,000.

BELOIT.

On permanent organization of the county in 1870, Beloit was selected as the county-seat by a vote of nearly two to one. Beloit receiving 143 votes, Solomon Rapids 43, and Glen Elder 36. The town site of Beloit was first settled by A. A. Bell in 1868, and for some time was known as Willow Springs. Mr. Bell anticipated then the improvement of the water-power at this point; also that the natural commanding location would in time be improved for a town. Owing to the continued hostilities of the Indians referred to in the county history, nothing permanent was done until 1869, when T. F. Hersey purchased the mill-site of Mr. Bell, and commenced getting out timbers for a dam. Notwithstanding two heavy floods Mr. Hersey had the saw-mill in operation the following September, 1869, and completed the grist-mill the next season.

The first township election was held April 4, 1871, and the following ticket elected: Wm. Bickle, Trustee; E. M. R. Blanchard, Clerk; D. E. Sedgely, Treasurer; Jeremiah Baldwin and J. W. Elliott, Justices; John Hyde, Road Overseer; Vinton Whitehurst and Magnus Munson, Constables.

In April, 1871, through the enterprise of Hon. T. F. Hersey and a few others, a school building was erected on the lot where Mr. Robert's furniture store now stands, and Rev. O. N. Fletcher took charge as first teacher of the first school in Beloit.

Mr. Fletcher also held religious meetings in the neighborhood, and was mainly instrumental in organizing the Baptist Church in this city.

During this summer of 1871, many meetings were held by the Baptists in places not usually devoted to divine worship. For instance, Rev. George Balcom stepped into one of the early saloons on Mill Street, and taking a violin from the hands of a player, stepped behind the bar, and played and sang, then gave out a text, and for nearly an hour held his audience in close attention. Elder Balcom located a claim in the west part of the county where he resided until his death in 1880.

Nearly every building erected in town during the years 1870 and 1871, was opened by a dance as soon as completed, and services held by some traveling preacher the following Sabbath when the building was allowed to fall into its owner's hands for the legitimate purposes of trade or residence.

In the winter of 1873, an iron bridge was built across the Solomon within the city limits at an expense of $10,000, for which the bonds of the township was given.

The town of Beloit was platted March 26, 1872, and the original description as found in the recorder's office covers all of Section 9, and the south half of the southeast quarter and south half of the southwest quarter of Section 4, Town 7, and Range 7 west.

The proprietors of the town were T. F. Hersey, A. A. Bell, George Campbell, Alexander Campbell, C. H. Morrill, Edward Valentine, W. C. Ingram and Daniel Kepler. The town grew very rapidly, and in July, 1872, was incorporated as a city of the third class, an election held, and the following city officers chosen: Mayor, T. F. Hersey; Councilmen, W. C. Ingram, M. R. Mudge, H. H. Lyon, Joseph Baughman, J. R. Vaughan.

The Mayors have been T. F. Hersey, G. W. Elliott, Alex. Campbell, E. Valentine, W. S. Vreeland, John S. Rogers, and W. S. Vreeland.

On the 10th of March, 1879, Gov. John P. St. John proclaimed Beloit a city of the second class.

In 1872, the school district in which this town is situated, which was the second district formed in the county, voted $5,000 bonds to build a schoolhouse, which was completed in the spring of 1873. In 1878, this building was found to be too small to accommodate the scholars, and a $3,000 addition was built thereto. In 1880, a frame building valued at $2,000 was erected in the Second Ward, and is known as the Second Ward schoolhouse. Four hundred pupils are in attendance during the present (October, 1882) term under the supervision of B. S. Hutchins, principal and seven assistants. Five hundred and forty-two pupils are enrolled in this district, and nine months school held per annum. The current expenses per year amount to $3,752.70. It is one of the largest and best schools in the county.

The School Board is composed of the following named gentlemen: W. H. Mitchell, President; Samuel Thanhouser, Treasurer; J. H. Roberts, George T. Finnell, H. T. Rogers.

A. A. Bell was appointed postmaster July 1, 1870, and held the office for several months with Joel Miley as assistant at a fixed salary of $12 per annum. In April, 1871, H. H. Lyon was appointed, vice Bell, resigned, and held the office until the spring of 1873, when C. H. Long assumed charge. On the 7th of September, 1875, the present incumbent W. H. Mitchell was appointed, and the following year built the handsome post-office building on Main Street, and moved the office therein where it has since remained.

Beloit has two large three story hotels. The Avenue House was built in 1875, by Frank McGrath and H. Bramwell, on the corner of Main Street and Hersey Avenue. It is a stone building three stories above a well finished basement, and the roomiest house in the county. The Reeder House is of wood, and is on the corner of Hersey Avenue and Court Street. It was built by A. Reeder, and is now run under his management. Both houses are very popular and are a credit to the town and county. Several smaller hotels are also kept busy.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper to behold the light in Mitchell County, was the Mirror, whose initial number was published April 5, 1871 by A. B. Cornell. The proprietor was not wholly unknown to fame before he dawned upon the Kansas prairies. In Minnesota, he had been a representative in the Legislature from Steele County. The State of Missouri knew him as an attorney and newspaper man. His advent in Beloit was made under difficulties, and his first paper was printed in the open air. After a few months of real earnest hard work on the frontier, the Mirror suspended, and Mr. Cornell removed to Russell County, where he has since ascended the ladder of fame, at least a few rounds, by publishing the Kansas Plainsman and the Russell Hawkeye, representing his county in the State Legislature and serving the Federal government as a mail contractor. For completer details in this particular, the reader is referred to the history of Russell County.

About a year after the birth of the Mirror, Messrs. J. J. Johnson & A. B. Chaffee commenced the publication of the Gazette, the first issue appearing on the 11th day of April, 1872. On the 25th of June Mr. Johnson became the sole proprietor, and continued the publication of the Gazette alone until September 3, 1874, when his brother, W. H. Johnson purchased a half interest in the business, and remained with it until the second of the following April, when J. J. Johnson resumed complete proprietorship. Justin J. Johnson was one of the pioneers of Kansas, who served State and country in the Seventh Kansas Cavalry during the war of the rebellion; an earnest Republican and a successful pioneer publisher. In 1876, February 11, he sold the Gazette to an early settler of Solomon Rapids Township, named G. W. Anderson, who in turn sold the same to Brewster Cameron. Mr. Anderson removed to Lincoln County, where his further history will be recorded. Mr. Cameron took possession of the Gazette October 1, 1879. John Coulter was employed as editor; the paper was enlarged at once, and has since been the largest paper in Mitchell County. In May, 1880, S. H. Dodge, the present editor and business manager, assumed charge of the paper, and is, at present writing, occupying the chair. The proprietor is special agent of the Department of Justice under Attorney General Brewster at Washington, D. C.

During the first week of December in 1874, G. W. McBride, of Iowa, arrived in Beloit with new material fresh from the foundry, and commenced the publication of the Beloit Index. This paper chanced to drop in the field in the fall of "grasshopper year," and the people not being able to give it the necessary support, it survived only three months, when its editor returned to his native State, and the material of the office was shipped to S. P. Rounds, of Chicago.

The Beloit Record, a sprightly real estate monthly, was the next candidate for public favor in Beloit. Its first issue appeared February 15, 1877. In August of the same year it was made a weekly and shortly passed into the hands of the junior partner, Mark J. Kelley, who bought the interest of G. Webb Bertram. Mr. Kelley conducted the paper for a few months, and then sold it to W. H. Caldwell, who changed the name to the Courier. Mr. Caldwell was a member of the Thirty-sixth Iowa Infantry, an old publisher, a thorough printer, and he has staid by his paper persistently, until he has now the satisfaction of knowing that he has an established business and reputation.

October 1, 1878, the Western Democrat was started by J. B. Chapman who had just arrived from Tama City, Iowa. Mr. Chapman made the Democrat a success, and in 1881, October 14, sold it to F. W. Hiddleson, who changed its name and politics. The paper is now called the Western Nationalist, and advocates the principles of the national, or greenback party.

CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

Methodist Church.—This society in this city was the second church organized, and has enjoyed quite a marked degree of prosperity. It is now cared for by Rev. J. M. Davidson; has 120 members, and a thriving Sabbath-school of seventy-five members. The church building is of stone, erected in 1874, and is valued at $2,000. Beloit is the head-quarters of the Beloit District, and the presiding elder, now Rev. J. H. Lockwood, makes this city his home.

The Catholic Church, known as St. John's Congregation of Beloit, was organized by Rev. Henry Temphans in 1876. In 1878 their church, which is the largest in the county, was completed. The congregation numbers 400 members, and is in charge of Rev. Frederick Schalk. The church property is valued at $5,000.

The Presbyterian Church was organized March 17, 1872, by Rev. Charles Higgins pastor. The first trustees were, D. F. Eakin and J. S. Schwartz. A building committee composed of H. T. Walker, Joel Holt, George McKinney and D. F. Eakin were early appointed to build the church on Main Street. It is one of the most elegant houses of worship in the county, valued at about $5,000. It was dedicated December 1, 1878. The church roll shows a membership of 100, the average attendance at Sabbath-schools numbers 140. Rev. J. A. Pinkerton the present pastor, reports the church to be in a flourishing condition.

Branch is the present pastor; the membership numbers eighty-five, and the average attendance at Sabbath-school, 125.

Mount Vernon Lodge, No. 145, A. F. & A. M., was organized June 10, 1873, and chartered November 29, of the same year. Library and Historical Association was chartered September 4, 1879, with twenty life members, who subscribed $25 each. Among the donations was a fund of about $50, which was a balance left after The Soldiers' and Sailors' reunion was held at Beloit July 4, 1879. Dexter L. Ruggles was the first librarian, and W. C. Ingram is the present official. The library contains about 800 volumes, valued at $1,000, and is located on corner of Main and Mill streets.

BUSINESS INTERESTS.

Beloit is at present a busy broom corn and wheat market. Thirty car-loads of broom corn were shipped from this station during the month of October, and about fifteen of wheat and flour. There are three grain warehouses, one of which is an elevator of 10,000 bushels capacity.

In 1873, F. H. Hart came to this city and erected a handsome stone building on Main Street, where he commenced a banking business. This business has increased every year, and he has twice added to the size of his building. Mr. Hart also bought an interest in the town company, and has done much toward improving and building up the town. On east Main Street he has built one of the most elegant private residences in the western part of the State. The Bank of Beloit, A. N. Schuster, president; H. T. Walker, vice-president, and J. W. Walker, cashier, with a capital of $50,000, built an elegant two-story bank building, on corner of Mill and Main streets, in 1880; they also have branch banks in adjoining counties. M. S. Atwood owns and manages a bank opposite the court house on Court Street, which is in successful operation. Nearly every branch of mercantile business is well represented, many of the houses doing quite a large wholesale trade, and all of them carrying stocks, which indicate an immense business. There are three grain warehouses that are in constant use by the different local buyers; that of Denton & Co. being a steam elevator of 10,000 bushels capacity. Each of the above at present writing, is chiefly engaged in handling corn, although a few car-loads of wheat are bought each day.

Foundry.—Messrs. Derby & Paffenberger built a stone building in 1878 for foundry purposes, and until 1882 were engaged in the manufacture of every variety of castings, many of the handsome iron fronts in the Western towns bearing their mark. In March, 1882, they sold the business to S. H. Smith, who now employs several hands and continues the business.

Marble Works.—The business under the above head, in this city, is conducted by R. F. Wilcox, a practical marble cutter; he employs several hands in the shop, and men and teams constantly on the road. The value of the manufactured goods which left his factory during the past year reaches well up into the thousands. The business was established in 1878, and has grown steadily.

Flouring-Mill.—The largest and most complete flouring-mill in this part of the State is located at Beloit, and has grown from the little concern begun by Hon. T. F. Hersey in the fall of 1869. It is now owned by Messrs. Vreeland & Sheldon, and is valued at $35,000. The mill proper is a four-storied frame building. The engine house is sixty feet north of the mill, and contains an engine of eighty horse-power, which united with the water power on the south side, operates two roller mills and seven run of stone. The flour manufactured here has a good reputation and finds ready sale all over the State.

CAWKER CITY.

The idea of founding a town at this point was conceived by E. H. Cawker, J. P. Rice, R. G. F. Kshinka, of Milwaukee, and John J. Huckle, of Towanda, Pa. In February, 1870, Messrs. Rice, Kshinka and Huckle came up the Solomon Valley, and selected the site for their prospective town, took the numbers of the land as near as they could then ascertain them; and, returning by way of the Land Office then located at Junction City, filed on the southeast quarter of Section 21, the southwest quarter of Section 22, the northeast quarter of Section 28, and the northwest quarter of Section 27, Town 6 south, Range 10 west. In April following Messrs. Cawker, Huckle and Kshinka came to commence operations, and they found that their papers described land situated one mile north and one half mile east of that which had been selected, and that the land they supposed they had taken was occupied by actual settlers.

They commenced work at once on the land described by their Land Office receipts, and the city grew apace. The first building erected was the frame house on the southeast corner of Section 21, known now as the Spears building. It was built by E. H. Cawker. The town was well advertised and attracted the attention of immigrants. Mr. Huckle built a dwelling and returned to Pennsylvania, and brought a colony of emigrants from that State. Mr. Rice put up the first stone building now standing on Pennsylvania Avenue, and familiarly known as The Tribune building. The city was surveyed into lots and blocks, and the whole section included in the plat. The interests of the four town proprietors were confined to their respective quarter sections, Cawker taking the southeast of 21, Huckle the southwest of 22, Rice the northwest of 27, and Kshinka the northeast of 28. Some time in June, Cawker had a steam saw-mill in operation, and cottonwood buildings sprang up in every direction. The town was named in honor of E. Harrison Cawker, and he spared no expense to hasten the growth of his namesake. The plat of the town was not recorded until July 15, 1871. When the Northwestern Land District was created the Government Office was located in this city, and opened for business in June, 1872, with A. A. Thomas, of Cawker City, as register, and Thomas Plowman, of Leavenworth, as receiver. The Land Office remained here until December, 1874. when it was removed to Kirwin as a more central location.

In the early spring of 1874, Dr. J. M. Hodge, of Abilene, was appointed receiver of the Land Office in place of Thomas Plowman, removed.

On the 20th day of March, 1874, Judge Joel Holt considered a petition from Cawker City, and finding the names of a sufficient number of voters thereunto attached, granted the petition, and declared the city incorporated as a city of the third class. The first city election was held on the 2d day of June, 1874. The following were chosen city officers for the year to ensue: Mayor, F. J. Knight; Councilmen, A. Parker, D. A. Huling, W. Woodmansee, P. Wolfe, and J. A. Pope: Police Judge, L. S. Tucker. The present officers are: Mayor, F. J. Kelley; Councilmen, Jacob Rothschild, George Buist, George Tuthill; Marshal, W. C. Whitney; Police Judge, W. H. Mead.

Since the organization of the city the mayors have been F. J. Knight, J. A. Pope, W. C. Whitney, A. L. Topliff, A. Parker, and F. J. Kelley. The city being extremely orderly, no police force is required. Although the city has suffered by two extensive fires, it has no organized fire department. In 1879, a fire on the south side of Wisconsin Street destroyed seven business buildings and $15,000 worth of property. Again in 1882, four good buildings were burned on the north side of the street.

The first school in Cawker City (District No. 10), was opened with about fifteen scholars in June, 1871. The house used as a schoolhouse was located where the Berry Block now stands, and was made of cottonwood, size 12x14 feet. This building had previously contained the "household gods" of "The Depot Locater," and constituted his residence during the time he was required by law to reside upon a portion of the townsite before entering it as a homestead. "The Depot Locater" is the nickname given to J. J. Huckle by reason of his having, years before a railroad was built into this country, located a depot upon every lot of the town site; the location being in each instance just such as to suit the convenience of some customer he was inducing to purchase a town lot.

The teacher, Miss Phœbe Phillips, was paid in part by public money, and in part by subscription of the patrons of the school. The young men of the town constituted the larger part of the population, and they nearly all took a lively interest in this first school, as the teacher was perhaps the most attractive of the three marriageable ladies of the place. The school did not want for visitors especially at noon times. The next spring the teacher became Mrs. George R. Parker, whose husband is now postmaster and banker at Gaylord, in Smith County. The first public school supported entirely by public money, was opened in December, 1871, in a frame building located on the present site of the Chicago Lumber Company's office. That schoolhouse has since been moved to Pennsylvania Avenue, and used as a tin shop.

At the opening of the school there were about forty scholars, and the number soon reached fifty. The teacher, Clark A. Smith, having just hung out his shingle as a lawyer, received $40 pér month. The salary was eked out by evening and Saturday law practice, which gained the young lawyer a reputation which soon brought him a desirable practice. He is now Judge of the Fifteenth Judicial District. That first school numbered among its scholars two men who are now railroad station agents, one who is the editor of a successful daily newspaper on the Pacific Coast, and many of the little girls then are matrons now. And so it comes that very young towns look back to "the old days."

In 1871, School District No. 10, including Cawker City, voted bonds in the sum of $6,500 for a schoolhouse, which was built in the spring of 1872. In 1877, the building was deemed both unsafe, and too small for the district, and $1,500 additional bonds were voted, and the building rebuilt and enlarged. The present school board are: C. H. Van Wormer, clerk; G. C. Farmer, director; L. S. Tucker, treasurer; W. P. Trueblood, is principal, and has three assistants.

There are 205 scholars enrolled in the district, and the average daily attendance is 177. For the last three years an extra building has been rented for the primary department.

CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

Catholic Church.—In the summer of 1879 a church society was organized in Cawker City, by Rev. Clemens Newman, and a frame church building and parsonage adjoining, was immediately erected. The stone work of a large church was over half done when Father Newman arrived in Cawker City, but owing to a defect in the title, the work was abandoned and the frame church completed as stated. Said property is worth about $1,900. The Cawker City congregation numbers 225.

Father Newman also organized the Pittsburg Catholic Church, twelve miles south of Cawker, in a German settlement, the same season. It has 350 members, and a good church building worth $1,200.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—On the 14th of April, 1872, the Cawker City class of the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized. Rev. G. A. Blackstock was assigned to the Cawker Circuit that spring.

The pastors have been: Rev. G. A. Blackstock, H. G. Breed, E. R. Brown, C. L. Schackelford. The first trustees were: William Belk, Hiram Cobie, R. W. Knox. A comfortable church building on North Pennsylvania Avenue was completed, and dedicated in the summer of 1877. It is valued at $2,500. A comfortable parsonage was built under the management of Pastor Brown in 1877, at an expense of $500. The church now numbers ninety members. The present trustees being: Wm. Belk, N. J. Wooden, L. S. Tucker, C. A. Smith, John Berry. The Sunday-school class averages 125. Rev. C. L. Schackelford, the pastor, is also pastor of the Walnut Creek class, numbering some forty members.

Huling, Wm. Harris, C. M. Niles, Jr., and L. C. Porter. The church in the Second Ward was completed the following season, and the church property is now worth about $2,000. The membership is not so great as in 1874, as the Presbyterian Church drew away a great portion of its strength, and it now numbers only thirty-seven members. The Sabbath-school is in a prosperous condition, and under the supervision of Mr. Barton, has over thirty members.

The Presbyterian Church, of Cawker City, was organized on the 18th of May, 1879, and the first trustees were: A. W. Smith, E. O. Garrett and Clark A. Smith. The Rev. J. Baay was employed as pastor, and at present writing still occupies the pulpit. The church has no building of its own, but rents a convenient chapel east of the Whiting House. The furniture of the chapel is valued at $900. There are thirty-five members on the rolls, and an average of over eighty Sabbath-school scholars.

Cawker City Lodge, No. 125, A. F. & A. M., was organized under dispensation in August, 1872. The officers were: C. A. Smith, W. M.; Robert Addams, S. W.; L. S. Tucker, J. W.; D. A. Huling, S. D.; H. Vantilborg, J. D.; J. W. Hatcher, Secretary; R. W. Lundy, Treasurer; W. H. Burke, Tyler; Frank McConnell, Steward. The lodge was chartered by the Grand Lodge, October 17, 1872. It is now one of the wealthy and prosperous lodges of Kansas. Its membership numbers forty-one. The present officers are: J. W. McGhee, W. M.; W. H. Mead, S. W.; L. S. Tucker, J. W.; R. W. Lundy, Treasurer; W. A. Remfry, Secretary; Horace Potter, Tyler.

Ancient Order of United Workingmen.—On the 5th of May, 1880, an organization of the United Workman was placed in working order. The society has prospered, and at this writing, the books show a membership of sixty-two. The officers are: Joseph Jackson, M. W.; H. Shepard, Foreman; W. H. Mead, Financier; Frank Goepel, Recorder. Their regular meetings occur on the second and fourth Fridays of each month.

Reynold's Post, No. 43, G. A. R., was organized in Cawker City, March 16, 1882. The present officers are: W. C. Whitney, Captain; L. L. Alrich, Adjutant; George Latham, Second Major; Dr. A. Wilson, Surgeon; and forty-one members. Although a young post, it is in a very prosperous condition, having money in the treasury and one year's rent of hall paid in advance.

Great Spirit Spring's Lodge, No. 139, I. O. of O. F., was organized in October, 1879. There had been a lodge of this order in Cawker City before, but it succumbed to the hard times of "grasshopper year," and was compelled to surrender its charter. The lodge is now possessed of much material wealth, and is highly prosperous. It numbers fifty members, and is officered by A. Wilson, N. G.; W. C. Whitney, V. G.; F. Goepel, Secretary; J. Rothschild, Treasurer.

Hesperian Library.—One of the most popular public enterprises in Cawker City is the public library of the above name. It was organized in November, 1873, with a subscription capital of $77. It has now grown to be a large and self-sustaining educational enterprise. The books are valued at $800. The original members were: A. Patten, A. Parker, R. W. Lundy, C. H. Rew, Wm. Jensen, Clark A. Smith, H. C. Scrafford, Frank Clark, C. G. Eno, A. A. Thomas, W. T. S. May, J. S. Shearer, D. Dodge, H. G. Rew, Peter Wolfe and J. S. Berry. R. W. Lundy was the first librarian. Lewis S. Tucker is the present librarian, in whose office the library is now kept.

THE PRESS AND BUSINESS INTERESTS.

The Sentinel was the first newspaper to greet the people of Cawker City, Kan., as a home institution. It was first issued by E. N. Emmons, editor and proprietor, in March, 1872. It was a well patronized seven column folio, earnestly devoted to the rapid settlement and improvement of the Solomon Valley homestead region. Mr. Emmons is a native of Wisconsin, a good printer, an industrious and ambitious worker, who made the Sentinel a success. In September of the same year the Sentinel was sold to Flavius J. Macmillan, a young attorney from Boston, who conducted it until the spring of 1874, when he moved it to Phillipsburg and commenced the publication of a paper at that place, the history of which will be found in the history of Phillips County.

Mr. Emmons, the founder of the Sentinel, is now one of the leading real estate dealers in the northern part of Kansas, located at Washington, Washington County, Kan.

The Tribune was founded by E. Harrison Cawker, and was first issued in November, 1873. It was a handsome eight column folio, printed on new material. The foreman of the office, Mr. J. D. Botefur, was a splendid printer, having for years been in the employ of the Harper Bros., in New York. He made the Tribune one of the handsomest sheets in Kansas. The paper lived until the spring of 1875, when the hard times which followed the invasion of the grasshoppers in 1874, proved too much for it and it suspended publication, and the editor and proprietor, E. H. Cawker, returned to Milwaukee, Wis., where he has since been engaged in the publication of the United States Miller, a monthly magazine devoted to milling and manufacturing interests.

The Echo was the next paper to appear in the field at Cawker City, Kan. It was printed by Topliff & De Young, who had purchased the Tribune material. The first issue appeared in August, 1875, and started with the announcement that it would be independent in politics. In January, 1877, De Young sold his interest to A. L. Topliff, who changed the politics of the paper to Republican, and continued its publication until July, 1878, when he sold it to Stephen De Young. For a few months Cawker City was again without a paper.

The Free Press rose from the ashes of the Echo in the month of October, 1878, with Stephen De Young as publisher. It is an eight column folio, and has been independent in politics, except during the campaign of 1880, when it supported the complete Democratic ticket. Mr. De Young is a native of Pennsylvania and one of the early settlers of Mitchell County, having arrived here in August, 1871. He is a quiet, unobtrusive man, with firm convictions of right and wrong. He is true to his friends and makes few enemies; his political campaigns being conducted in a most kind and liberal manner.

The Journal now published in Cawker City by J. W. McBride, made its first appearance May 19, 1880. It is Republican in politics, and is a well-looking eight column folio well supported. Mr. McBride came to Cawker City from Gaylord, Kan., where he had published the Herald. Previously he had been connected with the publication of the Chief at Kerwin, Phillips Co., Kan. Mr. McBride is a thorough business man, who ceaselessly labors to make the Journal a success.

The Camp Fire is the name of a monthly paper started here in August, 1882, in the interest of the G. A. R. Mr. L. L. Alrich, the publisher, is a native of Pennsylvania, was a soldier during the war of the rebellion, and has a surplus of enthusiasm on hand which he works off through the Camp Fire.

Cawker City is chiefly noted as being a good point for trade, and the sale of corn and hogs. Two local grain buyers have warehouses at the depot, and are making daily shipments of wheat and corn. The business buildings are nearly all built of stone, and are very handsome. There are eighteen elegant stone store buildings, and several frame structures for business purposes.

The city has a National Bank with an authorized capital of $100,000. The directors are

H. P. Churchill, president; E. E. Parker, vice-president; H. P. Stimson, cashier; Fred Beeler, George Buist, E. O. Garrett, and C. T. Gorham.

The Farmers' and Merchants' Bank of Cawker City, is also located here. A. Parker, president, and W. A. Remfry, cashier. These banks are in elegant buildings of their own, one on Wisconsin Street, and the other on Seventh Avenue. The leading hotel is the Whitney House, a large three-story stone house of forty-three rooms, thirty-four of which are sleeping-rooms. This hotel is situated on the corner, with eighty feet front on Seventh Avenue, and 105 feet on Ninth Street. The Commercial a large frame hotel, is situated fifteen feet north of the Whitney House.

The city of Cawker numbers now about 1,030 according to the census of 1882, taken by the township trustees

WACONDA.

Waconda was the name of a town which sprang up on the farm of J. W. Terry, about two miles south of Cawker City, near the confluence of the north and east forks of the Solomon River. At one time in 1871, it had six or eight general stores; a large stone hotel, kept by W. C. Whitney; steam saw-mill; blacksmith shop and brewery. Now nothing remains but a dwelling or two. The hotel is a large farmhouse, the brewery an unoccupied building, while nearly all the stores are torn down, burned down or moved to help build up its rival, Cawker City. A large two-story stone schoolhouse, which was built in the spring of 1873, is the most conspicuous landmark left—like a headstone erected to the memory of a departed life.

REPUBLIC COUNTY.

LOCATION AND NATURAL FEATURES.

REPUBLIC County is the fifth from the east State line in the northern tier of counties; is bounded on the north by the State of Nebraska; on the east by Washington; south by Cloud, and west by Jewell County. It is thirty miles in width from east to west, twenty-four wide, and contains an acreage of 460,800. It is an excellent county for agriculture or stock-raising. About ten per cent of the land is valley or bottom land, and ninety per cent upland. When first settled, about five per cent was forest, but the timber has been cleared away until scarcely three remains. The principal part of the bottom land is along the Republican River, from which stream the county receives its name. On the east side of the river the bluffs, from fifty to seventy-five feet in height, sharply define the division of bottom and upland, but on the west side the change is very gradual in most places, so that there is no waste land; indeed, there is but very little in the county. East of the river to Washington County, the land is a beautiful plateau, broken only in a few places by creeks and draws. The undulations are seldom precipitous, and the general slope is toward the south. The soil of the upland is a friable, dark mold, fertile and porous, so that it is well adapted to wet or dry seasons; that of the bottom land is exceedingly rich, containing a little more fine sand, together with the usual deposits of bottoms. The county is quite well watered, living streams abounding in nearly every township. The Republican is the main stream of the county. Entering at the northeast corner, it soon makes a sharp turn to the south, from its easterly course, and continues nearly south through the county. Like the Platte of Nebraska, it is a mountain-fed stream, and never falls below a certain point in the dryest seasons. As a mill stream, it is not so valuable as many smaller ones, owing to its broad channel, with a bottom of shifting sand. White Rock Creek, the second stream in size, flows northeast into the Republican, in the northwestern part of the county. Dry, School, West Riley, Salt and Elk creeks are east of the Republican, and flow south into that stream. Rose and Mill creeks water the eastern and northeastern part of the county, the former flowing northeast into Nebraska. The timber from the banks of the Republican has nearly all been cut away. The smaller streams are still quite well timbered, White Rock Creek being the best. The soil of the uplands is fertile, very friable and well adapted to all kinds of crops and for pasturage. The valley of the Republican contains some of the most desirable land in all Kansas. It is from three to six miles wide in this and Cloud counties, but that of the upper Republican, in places, reaches a width of one hundred miles. In all parts of the county are quarries of excellent limestone. The stone is at first soft enough to be sawed with a hand-saw, but by exposure becomes very hard. In many places it occurs in layers of even thickness, five to eight inches, with a streak of red or iron-rust color through the center, which shows to good advantage when used for building purposes. There is also a fair quality of brick-clay in most parts of the county.

In the southern part of the county, adjoining the village of Seapo, is a salt marsh, in the form of an ellipse, about three miles long, from north to south, and two miles in width. It is known as Tuthill's marsh—so-called from J. G. Tuthill, one of the early pioneers of the county, who took up his homestead on the east side of the marsh. The marsh, containing about four thousand acres, is surrounded by high, rolling prairie, except small gaps at the north and south extremities, and is covered with a heavy incrustation of excellent white salt. It is as dry as the rolling prairie, and is without any flowing streams. At the head of the marsh, which is its north limit, is a stream called the "Canal." It is one rod in width, three-quarters of a mile in length, and is formed by the union of Coal, East and Turkey creeks. The mouth of the canal spreads out into three branches, which flow into the marsh for a short distance and disappear altogether. The tributaries that form the canal are all fresh water, and flow constantly, even in the dryest seasons. The salt is not in small patches, but is spread over an area of about fifteen hundred acres to the depth of an inch or more. The farmers collect wagon-loads of it for stock and domestic purposes. The accepted theory is that a subterranean vein of salt water underlies the marsh, and that by evaporation salt is precipitated. Prof. Taylor, Massachusetts State Assayer, made an analysis of the salt, and found it of an excellent quality. It is a remarkable fact that on the east side of the marsh all the wells yield fresh water, while those on the west side yield salt water. This would tend to substantiate the theory and to locate the position of the underlying strata. Borings have been made—one to the depth of sixty feet, and another two hundred and sixty feet; the latter threw up a column of brine, three inches in thickness, five feet. There is another large salt marsh in the southwest corner of the county quite as remarkable, and about twice as extensive as the one above described. A fresh water stream flows through the marsh, the water of which is only slightly brackish. On each side of the stream the salt lies in profusion. The grass which grows in this region is especially a favorite with all kinds of stock. Their predilection for anything "flavored with salt" is well known.

The lack of wood for fuel in this county is more than equaled by the supply of coal. The coal fields are in the center of the southern tier of sections, around Minersville. The lands where the mining operations are carried on belong to Messrs. Henderson, Richardson and Williams. The coal measures are from eighteen to thirty inches thick, and are worked by shafts and slopes, but are not operated to their full capacity. The coal is of the latest carboniferous formation, a pure lignite and lusterless. It is tough, with stratified structure, and separates easily along the lines of cleavage. In many respects it is a desirable coal. It does not kindle readily, but burns well when ignited, with a white flame; makes a hot fire, producing no soot, leaves no clinkers, and consumes to pure ashes. One of its peculiarities is that it slacks like lime, and becomes almost useless when exposed to the weather. Nearly the entire southern third of the county abounds in profitable coal deposits.

Potters' clay abounds in paying quantities in the southern portion of the county. The planting of trees has been very extensive in Republic County. A large number of farmers are supplied with fuel from trees that they have grown. The rapid-growing varieties are most abundant, but there are many varieties of hard wood planted. There are nearly six thousand acres planted in groves within the county.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.

Hon. I. O. Savage has furnished many of the notes on the early settlements, and the matter in quotation is copied verbatim from his history.

For a long time the Republican was the boundary line between the white and Indian territory, consequently the early settlements of Republic County were the scene of a great many Indian outrages. Daniel and Conrad Myers, the oldest settlers in the county, located February 28, 1861. Daniel settled upon the east half of the northeast quarter and east half of the southeast quarter of Section 1, Township 4, Range 3 west, and Conrad on the west half of the northwest quarter and west half of the southwest quarter of Section 6, Township 4, Range 2 west, of the Sixth Principal Meridian, where he still lives. During the most trying period of the early settlement, Conrad never left his claim, but Daniel sought a more safe retreat, and returned after the imminent danger had passed. During the war the Indians were very savage, and made many raids upon the settlers. They all proved futile; the frontier did not recede, but steadily advanced, until the Republican River became the boundary line. At this time the nearest settlement was in Cloud County, at Lake Sibley, which, however, was soon deserted on account of the hostile Indians. The nearest post-office was Manhattan, eighty miles away.

"Daniel Myers built a dwelling-house in September, 1861, which was the first in the county.

"The next settlers were James E. Van Natta, David and John Cory, who arrived early in the spring of 1862, and are still living on the land first taken. At the close of 1862 the population numbered thirteen, which included those above mentioned and their families. During the war the growth of the county was very slow, scarcely averaging three families a year, the settlements west of the Sixth Principal Meridian being regarded as an experiment."

In 1863 Samuel Fisher arrived, staked his claims upon Sections 5 and 6, Township 2, Range 5 west, but returned East again, and did not settle here until the spring of 1866.

The next permanent settler to arrive after Mr. Van Natta and the Corys, was James G. Tuthill, who came in the spring of 1866, and settled in the east side of the great salt marsh, on the present site of the flourishing village of Seapo. J. C. Riley and family settled near the city of Belleville about the same time. D. N. Davis settled near Republic City, and Thomas Lovewell, in the same year, crossed the Republican and located on White Rock Creek, near the town of White Rock. They were the first to move the frontier across the river. But the valley of the White Rock had long been looked upon as the most desirable location in Republic or Jewell counties, and only the dread of Indians kept the settlers from them up to this time. Before safety was secured, scores of settlers lost their lives in the attempt to establish here a home. Fisher and Lovewell, only by hair-breadth escapes, were spared to see the valley of the counties. After the war, Mr. Lovewell was an Indian scout.

FIRST EVENTS.

The first American to cross the county was undoubtedly Zebulon Montgomery Pike, the discoverer of Pike's Peak, who reached the Republican River at Scandia the 25th day of September, 1806. Here he is said to have found a Spanish flag planted in a pile of stones, and, notwithstanding that the prevailing sentiment among his followers was that it looked "prettier" than the American flag, history records that upon the present site of Scandia he first raised the stars and stripes over Kansas soil.

The first settlers in the county were: Daniel and Conrad Myers. Daniel's wife being the first white woman to enter its limits, with a view of making it a permanent home. John Myers, a cousin of the two brothers, came with them in February, 1861, and died the following April, his being the first death in the county. Lincoln, the son of Daniel and Matilda Myers, was the first child born in the county—date, September 15, 1861.

The first, last, and only soldier who went from Republic County, was Spencer Cory, who enlisted as a private in Company C, Second Kansas. He died at Springfield, Mo., of disease contracted in the army, after a service of a little over a year. The marriage between M. Way and Mary Tuthill was the first in the county.

The first post-office was Salt Marsh, now Seapo, and James G. Tuthill the first postmaster, which position he has held ever since. James Van Natta was the first justice, and was appointed by Gov. S. J. Crawford. He held the office four years.

The first law suit in the county was tried before him in 1869. Henry Mead sued Conrad Myers for breach of contract, and each party to the suit was his own lawyer. At this time there were no attorneys nearer than Marysville and Manhattan.

The law library of the county then consisted of the "Territorial Laws" of 1859, the Session Laws of 1865, the Testament and Psalms in one volume, and the Blue Laws of Connecticut; the latter being furnished by J. C. Riley, the first trustee of the Republic precinct, then attached to Washington County.

The first election was held on the fourth Monday of March, 1868. Although this election was not held at the duly appointed date, the officers elected were subsequently appointed by the commissioners of Washington County. The result was as follows: J. C. Riley, trustee; James E. Van Natta, justice; J. H. Frint, constable.

The first car-load of cattle fed in the county, and the first two car-loads of hogs, were fattened by J. Hindt.

MORMON MASSACRE.

There are no Mormons in the county, but a great many have passed through the county on their way to Salt Lake, and it is believed that a company of nineteen were massacred near the present town of Scandia. Charles N. Hogan, a scout, relates that a company of twenty Mormons were crossing the county before any settlement had been made, when they were attacked by a band of Indians, and all killed but one. The nineteen were afterwards buried by the soldiers on a high bluff, near the Republican River. Adjoining the village of Scandia, on a high bluff, on the farm of R. L. Whitney, is a large grave, containing a number of skeletons, which, if the scout is correct in his statement, is doubtless the grave of the unfortunate nineteen. The grave, when discovered, was covered with triangular flag stones, placed vertically in the ground a few inches apart.

INDIAN TROUBLES.

In 1864, during the great Indian scare, every settler left the county, except Conrad Myers. Raids had been occurring almost from the commencement of the war, but the situation had not, until this year, seemed sufficiently dangerous for the whole country, to warrant an organized armed resistance. In September of this year, however, a mounted and well-armed company of militia was formed, composed of the early settlers of Clay, Cloud, Washington and Republic counties. It was commanded by Capt. Isaac M. Schooly, with headquarters at Elk Creek, now Clyde. In the summer of 1868, the Independent Salt Creek Company of State Militia was organized, composed wholly of the early settlers of Republic County. It numbered about fifty men—W. P. Peake, First Lieutenant, and afterwards Captain, and W. H. H. Riley, First Lieutenant. The same year a company was organized in the northern part of the county, commanded by R. T. Stanfield. This company built a fort, and made several incursions into the Indian Territory. It was during August of this year that Gordon Winbigler, who had a claim in Jewell County, was killed within a short distance from the fort. A number of the men were out cutting hay, when they were surprised by a band of Indians. They rushed for the camp, and all could have reached it, had not Winbigler stopped to pick up his hat, which the wind blew from his head. This solicitude for his hat cost him his life, an Indian's lance severing his jugular vein before reaching the camp. Mr. Winbigler had a little dog, that after the death of his master set up a terrible howl. The Indians have a superstition that the spirits of those who are killed take the form of animals, and when this little dog set up its mournful howl, they, after several ineffectual attempts to kill it, came to the conclusion that it was Winbigler's spirit, and was there to torment them for his death. This attack upon the White Rock settlers was made on the same day that White was killed in Cloud County, the attack being simultaneous all along the frontier, from the Saline to the Republican, the Indians murdering about forty men, women and children, indiscriminately.

In May, 1869, young Granstadt, a lad of fourteen, son of F. E. Granstadt, was herding some horses with two other boys, near the present site of the railroad depot at Scandia, when a band of Indians swooped down upon them from the bluffs. Two of the boys reached the colony house, but Granstadt was shot and seven horses driven away.

In 1869, Capt. Stanfield, A. Davis, W. P. Phillips and Clarke Tenike were besieged in the block house by over one hundred Indians. A message stating their situation was tied to a cow's tail. The next day the cow arrived at Scandia with the message, but the Swedish settlers were afraid to venture to the relief of the party.

On the 25th day of May, 1869, a party of seven hunters from Waterville, with J. McChesney as guide, were in the vicinity of White Rock Creek, near its mouth, when they discovered a party of Indians on the divide north of that stream. They playfully fired upon them at long range, knowing that their ammunition would not reach the savages. The Indians saw their action, disappeared in the lowland, and did not return the fire. Although McChesney warned them that their thoughtlessness might lead them into danger, the party thought no more of the affair, and instead of taking the precaution to cross the creek, went into camp on its western bank. The next morning (May 26), just as the hunters were preparing to continue their journey, they were attacked by a party of Indians, who undoubtedly had been in ambush during the night. Two of the party were killed in the creek, one after he had got across, and the others, with the exception of McChesney, were butchered in the timber, on the west side of the stream. When the attack was first made, McChesney jumped, as if shot, and fell into the water. An Indian pursued him with a spear, but fortunately, at that moment, one of the party, to all appearances unhurt, rushed past the savage into the woods. The Indian's attention was turned to him, and McChesney crawled along down the river, and by secreting himself under an overhanging bank, escaped, and reached Scandia in safety. The fortunate man is an uncle of John W. McChesney, widely known in the newspaper circles of Northwestern Kansas. After 1869 there were no more lives taken in this county, and in 1870 and 1871 immigration was very heavy.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

The county was organized in 1868, and Gov. Harvey fixed the county seat at Pleasant Hill, eight miles northwest of Seapo. By a vote of the people in the fall of 1869, it was removed to Belleville, but was not permanently established there until the next year. The first election in the county was held on the fourth Monday of March, 1868, the whole county being in one precinct The vote cast was as follows: J. C. Riley, trustee, 8; I. M. Schooly, ditto, 5; J. E. Van Natta, justice, 13; J. H. Frint, constable, 6; his opponent, 6. Mr. Riley states that although the whole number of votes cast was only thirteen, as much electioneering and political "mouthing" transpired during the day, as though the woods were full of voters Although, the day was not the legal election day, the officers chosen were made "good" by appointment from the commissioners of Washington County, to which Republic was attached for political and judicial purposes. In 1869, Rev. R. P. West, the first representative, had a bill passed through the Legislature, detaching Republic County for judicial purposes, but neglecting to attach it to any judicial district. Consequently, until the next session of the Legislature the county was without a judicial organization, except that formed through the efforts of Justices of the Peace and Probate Judge. In May, 1870, the citizens of the southern part of the county petitioned for a relocation of the county-seat at Belleville. The immigration to this county in the spring of 1870 was very heavy, and those who came here with the design of permanently settling were greatly interested in this matter. The election for voting on the county-seat question was fixed for August 16, 1870, and consequently the new-comers were not legally qualified voters. Belleville, Scandia and Salt Marsh were the competitors. It is not the province of history to give an opinion as to the merits of any local disputes. It is sufficient to say that illegal votes were cast from all sections of the county; that citizens of Manhattan even took a part in the election; and that, finally, the whole of White Rock precinct, and 100 votes were thrown out by the judges of election. As a result the vote stood: Belleville, 166; Scandia, 76; Salt Marsh, 62. The county-seat was therefore declared fixed at Belleville. In 1880, a vigorous attempt was made to move it to Scandia, but without success.

The county buildings consist of a small frame building used as a court house, and an apology for a jail. A square, occupying the most eligible position in Belleville, stands vacant, awaiting the time when the county shall feel able to erect suitable buildings. The poor-farm of 160 acres, situated two miles west of the county-seat, has a very neat and comfortable dwelling house upon it, and good smaller buildings necessary to a farm.

The county roster, given in order, without their time of service, is as follows: County Commissioners—John Harris, J. M. Campbell, J. C. Reily; W. Newlon, Z. P Rowe, J. Harris; Z P. Rowe, J. H. STATISTICS.

The county has $28,500 in bonds outstanding with a sinking fund of $5,000 now on hand June, 1882. In 1881, there were 209 dwellings built at a cost of over $40,000. Acres in farms, 323,799; acres of winter wheat, 10,896; spring wheat, 17,482; rye, 9,317; oats, 7,825; barley, 192; buckwheat, 181; potatoes, 1,550; sorghum, 484; flax, 200; millet, 1,948; bushels of corn on hand in 1881, 535,902; tons of hay on hand in 1881, 21,714; pounds of butter made in 1881, 348,535; horses, 7,471; mules, 645; cows, 4,706; cattle, 9,189; sheep, 9,336; swine, 40,298; apple trees bearing, 5,734; pear, 867; peach, 59,528; apple trees not bearing, 51,925; pear, 1,888; peach, 138,218; plum, 13,874; cherry, 13,475.

In 1861, there were five white inhabitants in the county, and thirteen in 1862; in 1870, 1,281; in 1875, 8,048; increase in five years, 6,767; population in 1878, 10,132; increase in eight years, 8,851. Rural population 9,119; city or town population, 1,013; per cent of rural to city population, 90. Population in 1880, 14,913; in 1882, 16,234.

The drouth of 1861, was the most severe in the history of this county. There have been several since, that ruined the corn and other late crops, but the small grains have generally yielded something. The grasshoppers have made two or three raids, the most destructive of which occurred in 1874, and extended throughout the State, and over the greater portion of Nebraska. The crop of small grains escaped their ravages, but the corn was completely destroyed. During several years the chinch-bug did great damage to small grains with the exception of rye and winter wheat. The cold wet weather of the spring of 1882, nearly exterminated them, and it is believed that they are not likely to appear again for a number of years in sufficient numbers to materially effect the crops.

In June, 1878, a violent wind swept over the county from a point three miles east of Scandia, in a southeasterly direction, destroying one house that was in its path, and carrying, for a considerable distance, wagons, mowing machines, and farm implements. One man was borne along some distance, but was not seriously injured. The most fatal storm known in the history of Republic County, was the great Easter storm of April 13, 14 and 15, 1873. The wind blew like a hurricane from the north with rain and snow, and the thermometer for the first day stood at freezing point. One family, six miles east of Belleville, fearing that their frame house would be carried away, went to a neighbor's, who lived in a stone house, for safety. The husband of one of the families was in Waterville, and the other had gone to another neighbor for assistance, but the latter believing there was no danger would not take his team from the barn. When the husband returned he found his house blown down, and the two families, seven in all, scattered about the prairie, frozen to death. The pouring rain had saturated their clothing, which was soon frozen encasing their bodies in ice. One woman was found with a babe in her arms, sitting against a wagon wheel around whose spokes her hair had been caught and fastened with sleet. She was dead, and the child which was still alive, soon expired. The frame house that was deserted was not materially injured by the storm. The wind blew so strong that no beast could face it without soon becoming exhausted.

There are 108 organized districts in the county with a school population of 4,274. Average salary of teachers per month, males, $28.11; females, $22.11. Total number of schoolhouses, 101; log, 7; frame, 75; brick, 8; stone, 16. Value of all school property, $58,497. But few of the school grounds are as yet ornamented with shade trees. The schools are generally in a good condition, and the people are wide awake to the interest of education.

The railroad facilities of the county are very good. Through the northern tier of the townships of Cloud County, runs the Missouri Pacific branch, a branch of which runs up the Republican Valley to the northern limits of the county. The Burlington & Missouri River railroad runs along the north boundary, coming within the county in the northwest corner; and it will not be long before a road will be constructed by one of these two powerful companies through the center of the county, north and south, touching Belleville, and the coal and salt fields of the southern tier of townships. No railroad bonds were ever issued by the county. The Republican River branch was secured because it could be built with little expense, there being only a few short grades to build in its whole length. There are eight stage routes through the county.

BELLEVILLE.

Belleville, the county-seat, centrally situated on the picturesque and fertile table lands, was located and laid out by the Town Site Company in the fall of 1869. The members of the original company were: J. C. Reily, David Cory, J. E. Van Natta, T. C. Reily, H. G. Jackson, John Cory, J. H. Campbell, N. T. Van Natta, John McFarland, B. F. Saylor, R. P. West, A. B. Tutton, Henry Frint and two others. Within two years most of the stock was sold to second parties. The last officers of the company were V. Van Trump, president, and C. H. Smith, secretary. There is now no organization.

The town has a charming location, commanding views from five to twenty miles in all directions. Owing to its elevation, the supply of soft water is generally over 100 feet below the surface, but the water is of an excellent quality. It is only ten miles from the coal mines, giving its citizens the advantage of cheap fuel, which few towns in Kansas and Nebraska enjoy. The coal and salt fields are just below the town, and the Burlington & Missouri River Road or the Missouri Pacific will probably soon cross the county, from north to south, through the coal region, and Belleville, being on a direct line, will doubtless be supplied with railroad communications. In fact, the former road has made one or two surveys to the coal mines, passing through Belleville. In 1870, the county seat was removed to this place, an account of which may be found elsewhere. Some unsuccessful efforts have been made to remove it from Belleville.

The population of Belleville is now about 400. January 11, 1878, it was incorporated as a city of the third class, and the following officers were elected: W. H. Woodward, mayor; Chauncy Perry, Edward Knowles, D. Muller, E. E. Chapman and F. N. Munger, councilmen; C. H. Smith, clerk, and W. Haskett, police judge. 1882: F. N. Munger, mayor; W. A. Brock, S. G. Stover, C. Perry, J. E. Hallowell, J. S. Beckwith, councilmen; V. Van Trump, clerk; J. C. Reily, police judge.

With the exception of a few months, Mr. V. Van Trump has been the postmaster since the establishment of the office at this place in 1870.

The people are wide awake to the interests of education. The present schoolhouse, a fine two-story stone structure, was built in 1872 at a cost of $6,000. The first school was taught in August, 1870, by Mrs. W. S. Latham. There are now two grades; L. T. Billingsly is principal, and Miss May Tucker, assistant. The school is in a flourishing condition, and has some patronage from the surrounding country.

CHURCHES, THE PRESS, SOCIETIES, ETC.

There are two organized religious denominations in the place—the Presbyterians and Methodists. There are a number of other denominations represented in the population, but not being numerous enough to sustain an organization, they worship with the Methodists and Presbyterians. The latter was organized in October, 1873, by Rev. Messrs. Clark and Taylor, with sixteen members, which has increased to over thirty. They built a $2,200 church in 1874 and 1875. Revs. C. E. Jones, —— Loughlin, W. J. Moffit and W. R. Smith have consecutively held the position of pastor, and a new one is expected soon. The Methodists, now having a membership of about forty-five, organized in 1871. They have a $3,000 church edifice, and are in a flourishing condition. The pastors of this church have been Revs. R. P. West, G. E. Nicholson, J. J. Walker, J. T. Shackelford, T. B. Gray, C. G. Crysler, George Winterborne, B. W. Hollen and Rev. A. Hoffman, the present pastor.

The Belleville Telescope was the first paper in the county, established September 20, 1870, by J. C. Murphry. The first issues were about the size of legal-cap paper, and at that time there were only two houses in the town. It was suspended February 1, 1872; started again July 3, 1873, as an eight-column folio, and has been issued regularly ever since. It has a good circulation, and is a prosperous and well-edited county paper.

The Belleville Bank was established in November, 1881, by George N. and Earnest Davis. They have $25,000 capital, and are doing a general banking and farm loan business. They expect to soon erect a stone bank building.

In 1870 the Republic County Agricultural and Mechanical Association was formed. They held their first fair at Belleville the same year, and each succeeding year until 1876, since which time there have been no fairs held in the county.

Belleville Lodge No. 129, A. F. and A. M.—This lodge was instituted October 17, 1872. In connection with the Odd Fellows they are building a hall of brick with stone trimmings to cost $1,200. The society has about seventy-five members. N. T. Van Natta, W. M.; J. A. Mosher, S. W.; J. J. Scofield, J. W.; W. E. Hall, Treas.; C. Perry, Sec.; J. Nealeigh, S. D.; J. G. Rich, J. D.; E. A. Hallowell, S. S.; S. G. Stover, J. S.; A. R. Park, Tyler.

Belleville Lodge No. 96, I. O. O. F.—Instituted August 12, 1872. Forty members. W. Thompson, P. G.; J. S. Beckwith, A. G.; M. J. Creighton, V. G.; V. Van Trump, Sec.; D. DAVIS BROTHERS, bankers. George N. Davis, the senior brother, was born in Clay County, Mo., in 1853. When six years of age his parents moved to Plattsburg, where he was raised. His father was extensively engaged in the stock business and young Davis soon acquired a knowledge of the business which few men of his age ever attain. In 1868 he engaged in the stock business at Kansas City, remaining there about one year and was extensively engaged in shipping stock. He then engaged in the same business at Plattsburg, meeting with good success. Previous to going into the stock business he commenced a course at the Missouri State University, but left while in his junior year. In the fall of 1881 closed out his stock interests and came to Belleville, Kan., and in November opened a private bank in Belleville, the first in the place, and meeting with good success, sent for his brother and the style of the firm was George M. Davis & Bro. Soon after they bought a building and lot which they converted into a bank. During the summer of 1882, sold their lot and building to Mr. E. Powell. Birch, one of the most prominent men of the State. In 1881 he came to Kansas, locating at Belleville, where he engaged in the banking business.

CAPT. ADAM DIXON, farmer and sheep raiser, Freedom Township, was born at Wigton, Cumberland County, England, July 4, 1827, and raised there, remaining until twenty-four years of age and was engaged in mechanical labor. On February 24, 1851, he was united in marriage to Miss Ann Lightfoot, a native of the same county, and the following March sailed from Liverpool for the United States, landing in New York City, April 29, 1851. He soon after located at Hemlock Lake, Livingston County, N. Y., where he engaged in the merchant tailoring business, following this until the war broke out. In October, 1861, he enlisted as a private in the Wadsworth Guards at Geneseo, N. Y., and was mustered into the United States Service with the One Hundred and Fourth New York Volunteer Infantry, November 2, 1861, and actively participated with the First Corps, Army of the Potomac, from Cedar Mountain to Gettysburg. He was promoted to First Sergeant and commanded Company G through the second battle of Bull Run. On September 12, 1862, he was promoted to Second Lieutenant for general good conduct and efficiency while on duty. On October 21, 1862, he was promoted to First Lieutenant, after the battle of Antietam, and as First Lieutenant went into the five days' battle of Chancellorsville, Va., in command of Company G; also had command of the company at the battle of Gettysburg, but on the evening of the first day was captured and held as a prisoner of war for twenty months, confined in the so-called military prison of the South, having during this time made three unsuccessful attempts to escape to the Union lines. He was afterward promoted, receiving a Captain's commission for gallant and meritorious conduct while before the enemy, commission to date from May 25, 1863. March 1, 1865 he was exchanged at Wilmington, N. C.; was discharged and mustered out of service at Elmira, N. Y., July 28, 1865. In 1867 he settled in Maryland, remaining there until 1870, but finding it unpleasant for a Union soldier to live there, he sold out at a great sacrifice and emigrated to Kansas, locating in Republic County, and took a homestead on Section 24, Township 2, Range 3, on April 12, 1870, and at once began to improve it. He has added eighty acres, making a farm of 240 acres. This has been finely improved. He has a good house and barns, a fine peach and apple orchard, besides small fruit of all kinds. The place is well watered by Salt Creek and numerous fine springs. Mr. Dixon is the champion sheep raiser of Republic County, or Northern Kansas. In 1877 he started in the business with 311 common Missouri sheep and has been improving the grade by importing some full blood rams from England. In 1880 he imported two full blood Southdown rams at great cost per head and then bought rams in Western New York, and again in 1881, imported two more full blood Southdown rams from the celebrated Lord Walsingham flock, which took the first premium at the Centennial Exposition over all the world. These are the only sheep of this blood in Northern Kansas, and Mr. Dixon has the first flock of sheep in the country. The average clip is nine and one-half pounds, while merino rams imported go from twenty-six and one-half to thirty two and one-half pounds. His flock now numbers 558. In four years his sales on wool and mutton have been between $4,000 and $5,000. The interest must have paid 125 per cent per annum. Mr. Dixon has taken great pains with his sheep and thinks there is no reason why wool growing is not one of the best industries of this State. He is considered the most practical sheep breeder in Northern Kansas and there is no doubt but he is making the largest per cent on the investment of any one in the same line in the country, as he is well situated to care for them and has a thorough knowledge of the business. Mr. Dixon also imported a pair of full-blood Scotch Collie shepherd dogs from Scotland. Mr. Dixon is one of the most public-spirited men in the country; he is president of the Wool-growers' Association of Republic County; is also United States Commissioner for the State of Kansas, receiving his appointment in January, 1882. Mr. Dixon has a host of friends and is one of the most substantial men in the county. The letters which are appended to this biography will show how he co-operated with those who came in contact with him. He had five children by his first wife, (who died at Hemlock Lake, August 3, 1866,) viz: Joseph K., born at Hemlock Lake, N. Y., December 8, 1853; Mary E., born at Livonia Centre, N. Y., May 27, 1855; John L., born at Hemlock Lake, N. Y., May 10, 1857; William E., born at Hemlock Lake, N. Y., June 23, 1860; Thomas G., born at Hemlock Lake, N. Y., July 30, 1866,—died July 6, 1881. He was married in 1867, to Mary J. Harder of Livonia, Livingston County, N. Y. They have been blessed with one son, Robert Vickers, born April 29, 1875. Mr. Dixon is a member of John Brown Post, No. 44, G. A. R. and of Belleville Lodge, No. 96, I. O. O. F.

CAPT. ADAM DIXON: GENESEO, N. Y., December 14, 1869.

My Dear Sir:—

I have much pleasure in expressing to you my appreciation of all your good qualities of head and heart, while we were associated together as members of the late One Hundred and Fourth Regiment of New York Volunteers, and to convey to you my acknowledgment of all the kindly relations which ever existed between us. No company ever owed more to the tact and discipline of an Orderly Sergeant in moulding it into shape than ours did to you, and for that in the beginning, as well as your faithful, prompt and efficient discharge of every duty, it was my pleasure, as well as duty to the service, to aid in procuring your several promotions to the rank of Captain. Not that it required urging, for your merits were well recognized by all who preceded me in the command of the regiment. Further than that I desire to express to you my regard for you as a man. Our relations have been somewhat intimate for several years, and not only in our army relations, but, in our business transactions since, I have ever found you prompt, reliable, a faithful friend on whose good opinion I count with pleasure at all times.

Very respectfully yours,

JOHN R. STRANG,

Late Colonel One Hundred and Fourth Regiment, New York Volunteers.

GENESEO, N. Y., January 22, 1876.

To whom it may concern:—

I very gladly certify that Adam Dixon, Esq., now of Belleville, Kan., was a soldier in the One Hundred and Fourth Regiment, New York State Volunteers, during the war of the Rebellion, entering active service in 1862, as Orderly Sergeant of Company G, and retiring in 1865, with a Captain's commission. And that, during the whole of such time, his conduct as a soldier and a gentleman was such as to entitle him to the entire and high regard and respect of all who were brought in contact with him. His frequent promotion shows the estimation in which he was held as a soldier in his regiment and that he retired with the cordial good wishes of all his brother officers I know. Any claim which he may have against the United States, and may ask Congress to allow, I believe to be presented in the most entire good faith.

JOHN R. STRANG.

Late Colonel One Hundred and Fourth New York Volunteers.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, D. C. July 27, 1882.

ADAM DIXON, ESQ.,
Late Captain One Hundred and Fourth New York Volunteers.

Sir:—

In transmitting to you a formal certificate that you are not indebted to the United States on the books of this office, I take occasion to express my appreciation of the honesty and straightforwardness which prompted you to voluntarily refund an over payment that the accounting officers of the Treasury Department had failed to discover.

Very respectfully, O. FERRISS, Auditor.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 16, 1863.

MRS. ANNA DIXON:

Yours of the 15th inst., reached me this morning. I will cheerfully give you such information as I have, and should have written you before this, had I not supposed that your husband's letters contained as much as I know. We were captured together; I was with him during the battle, and can assure you that he fought bravely, and was among the last men of his regiment to leave the line we were ordered to hold. On the evening of the 1st, we surrendered, and were marched into a field about three miles to the rear of the battle field. The Rebels treated us well in every respect, except that they did not give us sufficient food; their excuse for this was, that their army was engaged, and they had not time to attend to getting rations for themselves. On the 3rd inst., a parole was offered to the prisoners; I accepted it on account of ill-health; had I been well, I should have refused it. Your husband and about one hundred and thirty other officers refused it, and they were started for Richmond; when they reach that place, they will be exchanged soon, probably, for our government has plenty of prisoners to return for them. Your husband was in good health, and I think that he will, without doubt, be able to endure such hardships as he may meet. I was sent inside our lines, and so came home. I have no means of knowing anything positively as to your husband, since the 3d inst., but I feel sure that he is well, and will return safely.

I am, very truly yours,

HOMER STULL,

First Lieutenant and Adjutant, One Hundred and Fourth Regiment, New York State Volunteers.

PETER P. DOCTOR, farmer, P. O. Scandia, was born in Forfarshire, Scotland in 1841. He learned and worked at the stone cutters' trade there until 1867, with the exception of three years spent in London. In 1867 he emigrated to America, locating in Boston, remaining a few months, and then going to New York City, and in 1870 emigrated to Kansas, locating in Republic County. Took a homestead on Section 17, Township 3, Range 3. For the first five years he did not progress much, as he did not know anything about farming, and had to wait and see how others did, and get along the best way he could. West Creek runs through his farm. Has seventy-five acres under the plow, forty acres of pasture, about three acres of timber, and a small orchard of all kinds of small fruits, two miles of hedge, stone house, and a stone barn 22x32 feet. Is raising stock, has eighteen head of cattle, sixty head of hogs, and ten head of horses. For the first few years he had to go so far to market, that he did not get along very fast. Also worked at his trade and went to St. Louis and worked since he settled here. Was married in 1871 in St. Louis, Mo., to Miss Jennie Chalmers. They have four children—Nellie, Alexander, Peter, Jr., and Robert.

ROBERT DOCTOR, farmer, P. O. Scandia, was born in Forfarshire, Scotland, in 1848; was a stone cutter by trade, and followed the business until 1867, when he emigrated to America, locating in New York City and worked at his trade until 1871, then emigrated to Kansas, locating in Republic County, and took a homestead in Section 19, in the northeast quarter. Has seventy acres under the plow, thirty acres of pasture, the balance being meadow. Has a forest grove of about ten acres; has some fruit, and has put up a good stone house 18x30feet, stone barn 22x50 feet, and has stone enough on his place to last him a life time, of good quality and uniform thickness. Is engaged in stock-raising, and has a few cattle, four head of horses, eighty head of hogs, and makes a speciality of hogs. Has been successful since he came here, and is well pleased with Kansas, and since they got markets nearer than sixty to sixty-five miles, he has been doing extremely well. He was married in 1870 in Philadelphia, Pa., to Miss Ella Shond of that place. They have five children—Annie, C., John, Kate, and Ellen.

JAMES DUNCAN, farmer, P. O. Belleville, was born on the Island of Buteshire, Scotland, in 1844. Learned the carpenters' trade, and lived there until 1867. He then emigrated to America, locating in New York City, remaining there four years working at his trade. In 1870 he emigrated to Kansas, locating in Republic County; came out with the Excelsior Colony, composed of mechanics. There were seventeen of this number who did not know how to drive a team, letting alone putting the harness on. Mr. Duncan was one of the seventeen, and says they knew nothing about farming; however he took a homestead, as most of them did, on Section 7, Township 3, Range 3, and they were the first to settle on the open prairie. Uncle Sam had a company of soldiers camped four miles from here, during the first summer they were here. Has sixty-five acres under the plow, and thirty-eight fenced for pasture; the balance of about fifty acres is hay land. West Creek runs through the place which furnishes plenty of water for stock. Has planted about five acres of timber, one and a half miles of hedge, 300 peach trees, some apple trees and other small fruit, besides a large number of plum trees. Has eleven head of cattle, seventy-five head of hogs, also one span of mules, and one pair of horses, and is doing much better then he expected when he came. Has worked at his trade a part of the time, and in 1861 went to New York City and worked at his trade nearly one year. He was married in 1872, to Miss Marian Shields of New York City. She was a native of Scotland, and came West in 1872. They have two children—Sadie and James, Jr. He is a member of Enterprise Lodge A., F. & A. M., Jersey City, N. J.

J. FULCOMER, farmer and fruit raiser, at Belleville, Kan., was born in Indiana County, Pa., in September, 1840, but was raised in Ohio until he attained his fourteenth year. In 1854 he emigrated with his parents to Wisconsin, locating in Dane County. In 1861, they moved to Sauk County, and in 1863 was married to Miss Eliza M. Stewart of Troy, Sauk Co., Wis., and was engaged in farming and hop raising until about 1869, when he sold out, and for about eighteen months, he was in the butchering business at Spring Green, Wis. In 1871 he moved to Kansas and located in Republic County, and soon after took a homestead on northeast quarter of Section 34, Township 3, Range 3, which he began to improve, but losing one of his oxen, he did not get along as fast as he would otherwise have done. Did all his work the first year with one ox. In 1878 he bought another quarter Section southeast of Section 31, Township 3, Range 3, and now has it well improved. Has 205 acres under the plow, and has been engaged in raising horses and hogs a number of years. Mr. Fulcomer is one of the largest fruit raisers in the county, and is the largest peach grower; Has 3,000 trees, 2,000 of which are in bearing. At the present outlook his crop for 1882, will reach from 800 to 1,200 bushels; also has 2,000 trees growing from the pit, planted in the spring of 1882. His peach crop netted him in 1879, $200. This was the first crop raised; in 1880, $150, and in 1881, the net was 50 per cent less, it being a poor fruit year; the crop for 1882, placing it at a low estimate, will net $700. Besides the peaches, he has 200 standard apple trees, cherries, crab-apple, plum and berries in abundance, making the orchard on the whole, one of the best in the county. Mr. Fulcomer takes great pride in his success as a fruit grower, and spares no time or labor in making it profitable and keeping it up in good shape. Has a good stone house in the midst of his orchard, well protected by a large grove of forest trees. They have four children—William H., Eliza A., Edward A., and Mary J. Mr. and Mrs. Fulcomer and their two oldest children, are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

J. C. GRIFFITH, M. D., and farmer, was born in Dearborn County, Ind., in 1821, was brought up on a farm until twenty-one years of age, when he commenced reading medicine, taking a course at the Eclectic Medical College, Cincinnati. In August, 1861, he entered the army, serving in the Twenty-ninth Indiana Infantry, as hospital steward for the first eighteen months; received a commission as First Assistant Surgeon of the regiment, serving until 1864; a good share of the time there was no other surgeon in the regiment. After coming out of the army, he located in Pawnee, Ill., and engaged in the practice of medicine, remaining five and one-half years, coming from there to Kansas in 1870, locating in Republic County; March 4, had taken a homestead on Section 35, Township 2, Range 3. Previous to this there was an old log house on the present town site, and Mr. Griffith put a small stock of drugs into this building which he brought with him, and sold the first goods in Belleville. At the same time commenced putting up a building for a store, and had it completed and put a stock of family groceries with his drugs in the building, and commenced selling from the new store July 4, 1870. He was appointed Probate Judge in August, 1870, and filed on Section 2, Township 3, Range 3, for the town site of Belleville by virtue of his office, and succeeded in getting the county-seat located at this point, and turned it over to the town company. Put up a house on his homestead during the summer of 1870, and moved his family there. The place is about one-half a mile from Belleville. In March, 1871, sold out his business and turned his attention to improving his farm and breaking the first upland prairie in the county. Some of his friends laughed at him for saying that he could raise crops on the uplands; the same land raised seventy-five bushels of corn to the acre under the plow; has good stone house and large grove planted, which is now forty feet high, with fruit etc., and has forty acres of timber and stone quarry on Section 36, with thousands of cords of good building stone. Was elected and served one term as Probate Judge. After his first term by appointment had expired, he was also elected School Director, and called a meeting to see what could be done about building a school house. They furnished $3,000 bonds, and the Doctor was instructed to purchase material and put up the building; but when he came to see the specifications, he saw it was impossible to build it for that money, and concluded to go ahead, and put it up as far as the money would go, being afraid if he called a meeting and told them that it would cost more, they would withdraw their votes. The first six months Mr. Griffith served as School Director, Probate Judge, and attended to his store and to improving his farm; practiced medicine besides preaching the gospel. He was married in 1841, to Miss Sarah Martin of Madison County, Ind. They had one daughter—Nancy I. He was married again in 1853, at Warsaw, Ind., to Miss Mary E. Personett. J. A. MOSHER, proprietor of the Pleasant View Nursery, was born in Somerset County, Maine, in 1847, was raised there until fourteen years of age, then moved to Kennebec County, and at the age of sixteen years enlisted in the Fourteenth Maine Volunteers, serving ten months. He was about the earliest settler on the prairie in Scandia Township. He at once commenced to improve his place with the intention of putting out a nursery. In the spring of 1871, he put out 60,000 apple grafts, which he kept increasing, and they were in fine condition and ready for market, when in 1874, the grasshoppers destroyed all his plants, and the money and labor of years was swept away. Although this was a severe loss to his hopes, he again started in the spring of 1875, by planting 10,000 more grafts of various kinds, which the following year were all destroyed. Still in the face of this difficulty, he did not give up, but in 1877 commenced again by putting out 40,000 apple, 5,000 cherry, 100 plum trees, and one acre each of strawberries, blackberries, raspberries, gooseberries, currants and grapes, and a large variety of crab and pear trees, and ornamental trees, evergreens, vines, etc.; raised 500,000 Osage orange and honey locust plants for hedges, and in fact there are but few berry trees, plants or fruits which will grow in this part of the country, which he cannot furnish out of his own nursery. This fruit is all choice and he makes a specialty of hardy varieties, which are especially adapted to this climate and soil. He is having good sales and gives entire satisfaction, and should receive a liberal patronage from the residents of Republic County, as this is one of the industries which help to build up a county. Mr. Mosher is entitled to a good deal of praise in the success he has made in the face of difficulties which would have staggered most men. He is wed to his chosen vocation, and is never so happy as when he can be working at some plant or tree to improve it or develop its beauty. He has a great many fruit trees bearing, and will enlarge his orchard with the intention of making one of the best fruit farms and nurseries combined in this State. Besides this nursery he has four and one-half miles of hedge on his place, and ten acres of fine timber, forty acres fenced for pasture, thirty acres seeded to tame grasses, and the balance under cultivation, and is raising a few very choice cattle. He has some imported full-blood Poland China hogs from Butler County, Ohio, and is making a specialty of fine hogs and other imported stock. He does not do as large a business as some in the county in this line, but raises as choice a lot as is to be found in the State of Kansas. He receives the highest price paid. Doctor, of Belleville Township. They have two children—Ira and Frank.

HENRY PATRICK, M. D., physician and surgeon, was born at Fredonia, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., January 9, 1825. He is of Scottish descent on his father's side, and from German Quakers on his mother's, who, in early years settled in Western New York. When he was but five years of age, his parents moved to Canada West, where they remained for a few years, thence moved to Kent County, Mich., settling near Grand Rapids, while it was yet held by the Indians, and nearly an unbroken wilderness. He remained at home helping to clear and improve the farm, till in his twentieth year; and though there were no schools for several years in that vicinity, he was so close a student of his father's library, that at eighteen years of age we find him teaching a district school. In 1847, he married a wealthy young lady, Miss Louisa Hartwell. In 1850, he engaged first as salesman, then as bookkeeper, and general manager in a large wholesale and retail hardware establishment in Monroe City, Mich. In 1853, his wife was stricken with paralysis; she was from this time an invalid until the time of her death, which occurred in January, 1859. Their two and only children were buried, the first in 1852, the last in 1855. The constant care and effort to restore his stricken wife, was the moving cause that decided him to engage in the study of medicine, which he did in 1856; first under the instruction of Dr. S. R. Arnold, a practitioner of eminence in the regular school of medicine. In 1857, he went to New York, pursuing his studies and attending lectures in Bellevlew Hospital Medical School; also in the Broadway, New York Hospital, and attended a full course of lectures in the Hygeia Therapeutic College of New York, until the spring of 1859, at which time, he had conferred upon him the degree of "Doctor of Medicine." The doctor in company with friends, spent the summer and autumn of 1859, in the vicinity of Moorehead Lake, Maine, recruiting his health, and worn energies, filling the time at his profession, caring for the sick. In early winter he went South, and located at Clarksville, Tenn., where he soon established a very lucrative practice, and was laying the foundation for eminence and success, when the war of the rebellion broke out. At the passage of the Act by the Legislature of Tennessee, "That all foreigners and all citizens of the United States, should take the oath of allegiance to, and support the Southern Confederacy, or leave within ten days,"—the doctor, being a Northern man by birth, and a Union man by sentiment, declined to recognize the Confederacy, and refused to take the prescribed oath of allegiance; also, being a law-abiding citizen, chose not to abandon the home of his choice and his business. The specified time expired. Then, when too late, he was compelled to leave under the cover of night, to avoid arrest as a foe to the South. Saving only his clothing and books, he made his way back north to Rochester, New York, where he commenced working at dentistry and a small practice till the close of the war. He three times enrolled his name for enlistment in the Union army; but was each time rejected, being considered too frail to pass muster. At the close of the war he again returned to Memphis, Tennessee, with a view of making that his future home. Soon after, however, the negro riot occurred at New Orleans, followed by a similar riot in the City of Memphis. A "reign of terror" lasted for several days, so terrible that the doctor concluded it not safe for Northern men with Union sentiment to remain there at that time, and again made his way North, spending the time for a few years in Iowa, Michigan and Illinois, among his friends. Early in 1870 the doctor decided to brave the hardships incident to a life on the frontier settlements, and came to Lake Sibley, Cloud County, Kansas. He pre-empted a quarter section of land, commenced improving it, and put out his "shingle" as physician and surgeon, and for several years did a very extensive practice, riding in a circle from ten to thirty miles. On his farm he planted several thousand trees, has sixty acres under cultivation, a fair house with well of soft water. It is pleasantly located, giving a fine view of the Republican Valley for miles up and down, with the enterprising city of Concordia in full view across the river. In the autumn of 1874, the doctor removed his office to Belleville, Republic County, where he now resides. He has a fine residence, surrounded by a well-grown Osage hedge, while his grounds are well stocked with the finest varieties of fruit grown in the country. The doctor has also a fine farm of 240 acres, in Republic County, with about 100 acres of substantial improvements, besides other city property. He has had rather a large practice since moving to Belleville. Is the oldest and has the reputation of being one of the most successful practitioners in the county. Has made many warm friends wherever he is known among the people. Credentials hanging in his office show that he is a member of the "Eclectic Medical Society of the State of Kansas." The doctor is a tireless student, an indomitable worker, a very close observer, a clear, logical reasoner, and has one of the finest libraries in the county. In the spring of 1875, the doctor was married to Miss C. A. Bradley, an estimable lady of Mahoska County, Iowa, who had for several years taught in the graded schools of Eddyville and Albia, Iowa. Had also been the principal of the Belleville schools for about two years, and conducted the first exercises in the teachers' institute held in the county, in all of which she gave entire satisfaction. The doctor and wife are very highly respected in the community, and wherever known. They take great interest in all public matters, especially those which tend to educate and improve the people. They are n ted for their pure moral character, their genuine hospitality, kindness to and friendship for everybody—and many can well testify to the good cheer and hearty welcome received under their hospitable roof, and around their festive board. In medicine, the doctor is liberal and progressive. In religion, he and wife are both what are known as Liberals or Free Thinkers. Preferring to do their own thinking, and have the courage of their convictions—daring to speak an honest thought before the world. While yielding to all other persons the same right, and equal protection in that right, are uncompromising foes to immorality, injustice, and wrongs of every kind or character. The doctor is also a member of the Masonic order.

CHAUNCEY PERRY, County Clerk, was born in Lenawee County, Mich., in 1848, and was brought up on a farm, working at this business in summer and attending school in winter, until the war broke out, when he enlisted in Company E, Third Michigan Cavalry, serving until January, 1864. The regiment was then veteranized, and Mr. Perry re-enlisted, serving until February, 1866. After his discharge, he went to Mount Pleasant, Iowa, where he was employed as clerk and bookkeeper in the Insane Asylum for nearly three years. Coming from there to Kansas in 1870, he located near Cuba, Farmington Township, Republic County, where he took a homestead on Section 1, Township 3, Range 2, and there taught school about eighteen months; then settled in Belleville, and soon after was appointed Clerk of the District Court, and in the fall of 1873 was elected County Clerk, holding both offices a year, and is now on his fifth term as County Clerk, and has given universal satisfaction during the time, and has made a host of friends during his residence in the county, and has been engaged in stock-raising to some extent since 1877. He was married in 1873 to Miss Counter, of Belleville; they have one son—T. S., born in 1874. Mr. Perry is a member of Belleville Lodge, No. 129, A. F. & A. He then resumed his law practice at Fortville until 1871, when he was stricken with the Western fever, and came to Kansas, locating in Republic County, and took a homestead on Section 34, Township 2, Range 3. This homestead had been taken, but when Mr. Pinkenton saw it he offered $800 for the bargain. This place he converted into a home, and has it nicely improved, with sixty-five acres under the plow; 8,000 fine forest trees of various varieties, such as walnut, ash, cottonwood, box elder, maple; besides 400 bearing peach trees, about 100 apple trees, cherries, plums, and small fruit in abundance, with good house and barn and plenty of good water; one and one-half miles of hedge, eighty acres of pasture, and everything to make it a pleasant home. There were but two attorneys in this county, and he enjoyed a good practice all the time he was there. He was elected to the Legislature from his district in 1874, and has been elected three times in succession to that office. In 1874 he was appointed trustee of the Blind Asylum at Wyandotte by the Governor for a term of two years. Y., remaining there five years; then to Ohio, locating in Seneca County, and remained there until he was of age; learned the carpenters' trade, and worked at this business while there; thence to St. Joseph County, Mich., and worked at contracting and building, with the exception of four years, when he was running a saw-mill, until 1869, coming from there to Kansas, and locating in Republic County, when he took a homestead on Section 1, Belleville Township. There were no buildings in Belleville at the time. The following spring he helped to put up a log building for a court house, and laid the first shingles in Belleville when he put on the roof; has worked at his trade more or less all the time he has been here, although he has lived on his farm, which he has improved during the time; has broke 105 acres, planted five acres in forest trees, put out two and one-half acres in an apple orchard, 1,000 peach trees and a variety of small fruit, and eighty rods of hedge; has put up a good house 16x24 feet, one and one-half stories high; good barn 20x30 feet, of stone, and a stone poultry-house 12x16 feet, and has this place in good condition. He has been raising stock, and has some cattle and about seventy-five head of hogs to turn off, besides some good colts, and expects to raise stock enough to eat all the grain the place will produce. He has done exceedingly well since he came here, and is well pleased with Kansas. He was married in 1854 at Colon, St. Joseph County, Mich., to Miss Staly, of that place; they have had four children—Henry, Sarah J., Willie and Estella, deceased. He and his brother-in-law, Mr. Leigh, put up the first buildings with shingled roofs in this township. There were but few settlers in the town at this time, the most of them settling there the same year. They were seventy-five miles from a mill or a store for a time. In 1878 he was elected County Treasurer, and gave such satisfaction as to receive the nomination and election for the second term. He was married in 1859 at Lena, Ill., to Miss Lowe, of that place; they have two children—Berty and Mamie. Mr. Stover is a member of the John Brown Post, No 44, G. A. R.; of Belleville Lodge, No. 129, A., F. & A. M., and of Lena Chapter, No. 105, Illinois; of the Olympic Lodge, No. 55, A. O. U. W.

A. E. TAYLOR, attorney, was born in Cheshire County, N. H., in 1849. In 1856 he emigrated with his parents to Iowa, locating in Jones County, and was raised on a farm until 1865, when he had the misfortune of losing his left hand and a portion of the right hand in a cane-mill, which obliged him to seek some other occupation. As soon as he was able he began teaching school, and all the spare time he had he devoted to reading law. In 1870 he located in Jewell County, Kan., where he took a homestead, and engaged in teaching, earning enough in this way to improve his place, following this business until 1874. He then located in Belleville, Republic County, and began the practice of law (having been admitted to the bar in this county in 1871); also, handles real estate and has made a specialty of collections; is a member of several Chicago commercial agencies, and has most of the work to do for the Chicago houses doing business in this part of the State. Mr. Taylor is one of the largest land-owners in this county, having over 900 acres of deeded land, 400 of this being in crops. Mr. Taylor is a man who attends strictly to business, and but few, if any, could have accomplished what he has in the same length of time, starting as he did, on a homestead, ninety miles from a mill, badly crippled. Only through his integrity and close attention to business has he been enabled to succeed. For the first two years after the city was organized, he was City Attorney, and then served as City Treasurer, and now fills both offices. He was married in August, 1881, to Miss Elbridge, of Boston, Mass. He is a member of Belleville Lodge, No. 55, A. O. U. W.; also of the Patrons of Husbandry, and of the I. O. G. T., and has been vice-president of the State temperance organization of this county.

He was mustered out in 1865, and located in Henry County, Ill., where he remained until 1868, when he went back to Union County, Iowa, where he remained until 1870. From here he emigrated to Kansas, locating in Republic County, and took a homestead in Jefferson Township, and was among the early settlers in this part of the county. He improved his place by breaking 100 acres, planting five acres of forest, putting out a good orchard and put up good buildings, and was extensively engaged in hog-raising until the spring of 1882. He then sold out, and bought 140 acres in Richland Township, on Sections 4 and 5, with seventy acres under the plow, forty acres fenced for a pasture, a good creek running through the place, with plenty of living water for stock, and forty acres of good timber. In December, 1881, the Patrons of Republic County organized a body known as the Republic County Corporation Association, for the purpose of carrying on a co-operative store at Belleville, with a capital of $1,000 to start with. There were sixty shareholders when they commenced business in the spring of 1882. In July this stock had increased to $1,125, with eighty-eight shareholders. The first 107 days netted ten per cent on the investment, and five per cent rebate was paid shareholders on the amount traded at the store, and two and one-half per cent to Patrons not shareholders. The trade is growing very fast, and there will be more stock sold during the fall of 1882 and the business enlarged. Mr. Terpening was one of the principal movers in this new enterprise, and was elected manager of the business, in which he has proved himself to be thoroughly competent, and he is a sharp business man, with an extensive acquaintance throughout the city, and wholly reliable and ably assisted by his amiable wife and pleasant daughters. He was Town Trustee or Justice of the Peace a good share of the time while a resident of Jefferson Township. He was married in Union County, Iowa, in 1869, to Miss A. V. Smith, of that place; they have two daughters—Bertha A. and Myrtle A. Mr. Terpening is a member of John Brown Post, No. 44, G. A. R.

In 1872 he took a college preparatory course at the Maine Central Institute, and graduated in 1875. After graduating, he took up the study of law, which he had been reading previous to this, at Belfast, Me., remaining there four months; thence to Bangor, Me., where he finished his course, and was admitted to the bar at the April term of Court in 1878. During the time he was taking his law course, he spent about three months of each year in teaching. Soon after finishing his law course he began the practice of law in Penobscot County, Me., remaining there three years, but concluded there were better openings in the West, and in the spring of 1881 he emigrated to Kansas, and was in the office with Col. M. M. Miller, of Clay Center during the summer. In September, 1881, he was admitted to the bar in Clay County. In February, 1882, he located at Belleville, Republic County, and opened an office for the practice of law. He has met with good success, and is a valuable addition to the bar of Republic County. In 1878 he bought the Belleville House, which he remodeled and owned about two years. After disposing of his stock of goods, he engaged in the real estate and collection business, and in the fall of 1881 put in a stock of furniture. In the summer of 1882 he put up the first brick building in the place, 24x64 feet, two stories high; the front is used for a bank, and the rear for the post-office, the upper story being used for the Masonic and Odd Fellows' hall. There were but three women in the party, Mrs. Wallin being among them. They were there three weeks when the Indians were repulsed, and their colony was broken up. Mr. Wallin wrote a full and complete history of the colony's settlement, their fight with the Indians and all the details, which was published by the New York Sun, and which are on file at the present time; then went to Salt Creek, where he remained until the spring of 1870, when he took up a quarter section of Section 29, Township 3, Range 3, situated on West Creek; was the first settler on this creek, and got a desirable farm; has about forty acres of timber, a good share of it being oak, which was the only oak in this portion of the town; has sixty acres under plow, and the balance being for hay and pasture. He was engaged as locating agent in the county for several years, and was instrumental in settling a good many people in this vicinity, working hard to get the county well settled. In 1872 he commenced improving his farm, and lived there until the spring of 1882, when he sold out and bought the hardware business of Shaw Bros. He is also engaged in the real estate and land business, having opened an office in the fall of 1881. Mr. Weeks is a good business man, and will build up a good trade in his new business. Johnston, of Allen County, Ind.; they have two children—Olive A. and William R. He is a member of Belleville Lodge, No. 129, A., F. & A. M., and of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

SCANDIA.

The most prosperous and business-like town in Republic County is situated on the east bank of the Republican River, at a point where the river valley on that side terminates. About four miles north of the town bold, strong and well-rounded bluffs loom up and press closely to the river as far as Scandia, where they make a right angle to the east; then further on a curve to the south, sharply outlining the bottom and uplands. Viewed from the south, the town is within a curve of bluffs which yield fine natural protection from the cold, winter winds of the north. It faces west for business purposes, and south for natural advantages. From the north and east, the approaches close to town are sharp and steep, while on the south and west the broad and fertile valley of the Republican stretches out in a wide plain, varying from two to three or more miles in width; both sides of the river, being crossed by a strong trestle bridge at the foot of the principal street. The town site is, perhaps, the most interesting, historically, of any place in the county, for seventy-five years ago it was the seat of the Pawnee Republican village, and was covered by hundreds of lodges. Here the great chief and the medicine men of the tribe lived and drew the warriors and braves together at the war-dance and around the council-fires. Here, on the spot teeming with business marts, schools, churches and happy homes, many an unfortunate white man has paid with his life the penalty of a too venturesome curiosity and ambition to penetrate the dominion of the savage.

In 1868, the Scandinavian Agricultural Society of Chicago selected this point on which to locate a colony. A small immigration (about fifteen Swedes) followed that year, and was largely augmented in 1869, 1870 and 1871, and by scattering arrivals ever since from Chicago and direct from the Scandinavian Peninsula, until they now number about 1,000 of the population of the county and one-fourth of the town. In 1869 the Chicago support of the colony sent out a saw-mill, which was of great value to the early settlers, there being at that time considerable timber on the Republican. In 1871 it was converted into a grist-mill, which brought business to the town from miles around, and also held the home trade. In the spring of this year the ferry was also put into operation by citizens of Scandia, by which the town was able to take advantage of the heavy travel passing along from Iowa to Kansas. In 1873 Messrs. Ericsson & Forest purchased the old mill, and a steam mill was erected at a cost of $25,000. During this year, also, the ferry was sunk during a great storm. In 1877 the people of Scandia built the dam and improved the water-power here, and the mill was removed and much enlarged and improved.

For some years previous to the coming of the railroad to Scandia, in December, 1878, the growth of the town was very slow. A committee, consisting of L. C. Hanson, C. W. Gulick, A. D. Wilson and L. H. Tibbetts, was chosen by the citizens, and to them is mostly due the credit of obtaining for this region railroad communication. At the time that they were canvassing the county in favor of the extension of the Central Branch, the Junction City & Fort Kearney Road had made a proposition which involved the voting of $130,000 bonds. The coming of the Central Branch road placed Scandia in the list of the flourishing and growing cities of Northern Kansas.

The town site of Scandia was chosen and laid out in the fall of 1868, and the old stone Colony house erected. On March 28, 1879, Scandia was incorporated as a city of the third class, and has been prosperous ever since under the new organization.

The first officers were: A. D. Wilson, mayor; C. W. Gulick, D. F. Longnecker, T. A. Nelson, L. C. Hanson and A. B. Wilder, councilmen; A. D. Marble, clerk; Isaac McClure, treasurer; R. L. Whitney, police judge, and M. J. Sigsby, marshal.

EDUCATIONAL, CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

Quite as much interest is taken in education as though the population was exclusively American. The public school is in a flourishing condition, the building being a credit and ornament to the town. It is a fine cut stone building 40x60 and 28 feet, two stories each 14 feet, occupying an eligible position on the bluffs in the eastern portion of the town. It was built in 1880 of that excellent quality of limestone, so abundant in the county, and cost about $8,000. Prof. McAfee, the present, and for three years past the principal, has been a teacher for over twenty years and has ably managed the Scandia school. The school has quite a patronage from a distance, pupils attending for the benefit of the normal or high school course.

The Lutheran Church was organized in 1873, and in 1876 erected a $1,500 stone edifice which is commodious, and presents a neat and appropriate appearance. Rev. N. Oslund is the present pastor. The present membership is about 180.

The Methodist denomination has a fine, large stone church building erected in 1879. The church is in a flouishing condition and has about thirty members.

The Presbyterian denomination has a neat frame edifice, occupying one of the most desirable situations within the city limits. The membership is not large and they are without a pastor.

The Free Will Baptists organized a society and built a church in 1879. The church has now a membership of about twenty. The Baptists have also an organization but no building.

Orion Lodge No. 50, Knights of Pythias, was instituted March 18, 1882, by Max J. Alwens, Grand Master at Arms of Kansas. There are forty-five members. Officers, E. M. Purdy, C. C.; C. H. Buck, V. C.; C. S. Morey, M. E.; J. S. Thompson, M. of F.; F. Newton, K. of R. and S.; H. Speldia, M. A.; J. Hamberger, Prelate; J. Wind, I. G.; F. Fliner, O. G.

Scandia Lodge No. 156, I. O. O. F. was instituted March 20, 1880. They have about twenty-five members, and are in good working order. Officers, M. Curren, N. G.; W. A. Smith, V. G.; C. P. Carstensen, R. S.; D. F. Longnecker, F. S.; W. F. Allen, Treasurer; A. B. Wilder, D. D. G. M.

Lebanon Lodge of Masons is working under a dispensation, granted in August, 1882. Membership twenty-five.

THE PRESS AND OTHER BUSINESS INTERESTS.

The Belleville Republic was established by A. B. Wilder, February 7, 1872, as a seven-column folio, all home print. May 6, 1874, it was sold to Frank Kirk, and the office removed to Jewell Center. Re-established under the same name at Belleville August, 1875; it was moved to Scandia one year later. The name was then changed to Republic Journal. In August, 1878, the Journal was re-purchased by Mr Wilder, and sold to S. W. More in November, 1879. In June, 1881, C. F. Woodward purchased the establishment, and in April, 1882, Mr. Wilder, present editor and proprietor, again came into possession. The Journal is still a home-print, and is a good local and county paper.

A. B. Whiting opened the first general store in Scandia in June, 1870,—rather it was operated under the firm name Baker & Co. In November of that year Wilson Bros. established themselves in the same line, and continued until May, 1871. Then came A. B. Miller and Augustus Wells.

Scandia is now the best business point on the Central Branch, north of Concordia. It is one of the best hog markets in Northwestern Kansas. In 1881 over 250 car-loads of hogs were shipped from here, besides about 40 of cattle, 98 of corn, 9 of potatoes, 7 of wheat, and 6 each of sheep and rye. The merchandise received and disposed of last year was 275 car-loads, besides 300 car-loads of lumber sold from the yards of the town. The general merchandise business yearly amounts to nearly $200,000, and that of grain, stock, lumber and the mill will nearly double that amount.

The Hanson and Valley houses are excellent hotels. The former has the most of the traveling patronage.

The first store in Scandia was opened by Wilson Brothers in the Old Colony House, in 1870.

The Farmers' and Merchants' Bank was established in February, 1879, by McClure & Allison. The firm name afterwards became McClure Brothers, who were succeeded by the present owner, C. S. Morey. A general banking business is transacted and money loaned on farms and real estate.

The mill property at this point is very valuable, owing to the expense of constructing the dam and flume, and the scarcity of mills in Republic and Jewell counties; there being only three in the former, and none in the latter. It is owned by C. F. Ericsson, who values it at over $20,000. There are four runs of burrs and apparatus for making patent flour. Only sixty-horse power is used, but there is water enough for two or three times that amount. These mills, since greatly improved, are the original saw and grist-mills, sent out by the Chicago Company, in 1871.

The blocks are held in place by springs at the right of each line; the blocks are easily and quickly changed to form any reading matter desired and are adapted not only for business men but for schools. Mr. Marble has bought out a factory at Lincoln, Neb., which was opened and operated by Foster & Parsons who were handling the boards on a royalty, and will operate it himself and is making arrangements to erect a factory at Independence, Iowa, where he will make his headquarters; the boards are also manufactured at Bloomsburg, Pa.; in connection with this patent had to invent a machine for printing the blocks, there being but one place in the world where this kind of work is done; has also received a patent for a carpet strip for fastening carpets without the use of tacks. Mr. Marble is a hard-worker and has certainly laid foundations for future success. He was married April 23, 1882, to Mrs. T. Belle Martin, M. D., of Scandia. REPUBLIC CITY.

The town of Republic City is in the valley of the Republican River, one and one half miles from the stream and ten miles north of Scandia. It is in the cradle of its existence; having been laid out and given a "local habitation and a name" in May, 1880.

But it is a live, wide-awake town—just young enough to be vigorous, and busy enough to be in good spirits. Since its establishment it has grown very rapidly, having a population of 250. It is surrounded by an excellent country, and, enjoying the benefits of a railroad, it will continue its prosperity for some time. One year and a half ago only a blacksmith-shop and a post-office could be seen. Now a cluster of busy stores, shops, hotels, livery stables, stock-yards, elevators, dwellings and a schoolhouse have sprung forth. At this point a good bridge spans the Republican, which causes a great many emigrants to pass through the town, coming by way of Beatrice and Fairbury, Nebraska.

"Three miles west of the town, on a high point of land, the outline of a large Indian town is as plainly visible as it was fifty or a hundred years ago. The streets are regular, the wigwams were in rows and a large number of them. The ground floor is exactly like a circus ring with earth thrown up around the circle. By measurement they are all thirty feet in diameter. Immediately back and to the south of this Indian town is a broad and almost perfectly level plane affording fine picket grounds, having the best possible commanding view of the surrounding country. The view from the Indian town site covers sixteen miles to the north and northwest, twelve to the northeast, ten due west and about the same to the south and east. The Republican Valley lay spread out before them for many miles, and the slightest intrusion or invasion of their domain would be readily detected. The town faces north and the streets run north and south. About forty rods north of the town the river makes a sharp curve around a low point of land covered with low brush and a few shrubby trees. Here are found Indian trinkets, powder horns, moccasins, beads, dinged-up copper kettles, etc., etc. In this locality were their winter quarters. A natural protection from the cold winds was afforded by a heavy clump of timber on the outer curve of the river, which formed a semi-circle around them to the north. A ford across the river lay directly in front of this low point of land. Here, it seems, nature had striven hard to combine every advantage and condition suited to Indian life. This town was occupied, not many years ago by the Cheyennes or Arapahoes who were allies.

SCHOOLS, CHURCHES, ETC.

The Republic City school is in a flourishing condition. A $700 school building was built last year, which was designed to meet the wants of the town for four or five years.

The Baptist Church was organized at Otter Creek in 1871, and since the starting of the town has been removed.

The Christian Church was organized at Otter Creek schoolhouse in 1874.

When the Central Branch is extended into Nebraska the town will likely be benefited by having the western market brought closer by connections with the B. & M.

Some of the oldest settlers in the county live in or adjacent to Republic City. Capt. Stanfield, who commanded the militia at this point in 1868 resides here.

WHITE ROCK.

White Rock is a small village ten miles northwest of Scandia, and six miles from the mouth of the stream of the same name a tributary of the Republican rising in Smith County, and running due east across Jewell into Republic County. It is near the western boundary, and was one of the most prosperous and flourishing towns in the county until the Central Branch Railroad was completed up the east side of the Republican. Even that misfortune did not destroy the town altogether. It is still a business point, although it has not grown since. It was then the depot of trade for a broad district, embracing the famous valley of White Rock and the adjacent portion of the Republican. The valley of the White Rock is the finest portion of Jewell or Republic counties, and during the frontier days more Indian outrages occurred within its borders than along any other stream in these counties. These outrages occurred year after year until 1870 when a permanent peace succeeded throughout the homestead region. Emigrants, as now they wend their way up the peaceful valley of this beautiful stream, seeking homesteads on the adjacent lands or in the counties farther to the west, can hardly realize the change in circumstances. Now substantial and beautiful homes are found at intervals along the valley. The Burlington & Missouri River Railroad has surveyed a line to this place and should the county construct the line the town will resume its past prosperity.

The stream furnishes water-power a greater part of the year for a substantial grist-mill, which is furnished with steam power for steady work. The schools are in good condition. The population, of about 200, take great interest in all that pertains to the weal of their place, and the school being the most important, has careful attention. The Baptists here have a church edifice and their denomination flourishes both here and in the adjacent country. Other denominations worship in their church.

He was one of the first homesteaders on the prairie in this township; and was eighty miles from railroads, and buffalo and antelope were roaming over this part of the township. He has 110 acres under the plow, eleven acres of pasture, two acres of timber, 160 rods of hedge, fifty apple and fifty peach trees, and small fruits of all kinds. He has been offered inducements by private parties of Hardy, Neb., to locate there, and by so doing would hold the most of his old customers besides gaining a large trade from other territory, and if he goes there he will be sure to work up a large trade. BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.—GRANT TOWNSHIP.

JOHN J. BURKMAN, farmer, P. O. Seapo, was born in Sweden, in 1840. Learned his trade, that of mason, and worked at it and farming until 1866, when he emigrated to America, locating in Illinois, and lived there one year, coming to Kansas in the spring of 1867, first locating at Lawrence. Soon after he located in Manhattan, and for two years was engaged in different vocations. Went from thence to Marshall County, and was engaged in contracting and building for eight years. In 1878, he located in Republic County, and bought a farm in Section 30, Township 4, Range 2, consisting of 160 acres. He has 100 acres under the plow, forty acres of pasture and the balance all fenced. Salt Creek runs across one side of the place, and he has ten acres of good timber. Also has three acres of forest trees which he planted, and a good peach and apple orchard. Has a good stone barn 18 x 28; is raising stock; has thirty head of cattle and 100 head of hogs; has been Township Treasurer and Clerk one term each. He was married in September, 1882, to Miss Chrissie Engstrom. Is a member of the Grange, and a member of the Lutheran Church.

J. W. CORY, farmer, P. O. Seapo, was born in Cortland County, N. Y., in 1840. When five years of age his parents emigrated to McHenry County, Illinois, remaining there twelve years. From there went to Iowa, locating in Fayette County, where he remained until the fall of 1861, when he came to Kansas, and located on a farm on Sections 17 and 18, Township 4, Range 2. Then spent the winter at Lake Sibley, in Cloud County. At that time there were but two or three families in Republic County, and there was quite a settlement at Lake Sibley. Mr. Cory was one of the pioneers of Republic County, and at once began improvements on his place. As soon as the Homestead Act was passed, filed a homestead, and at that time there were but three places filed on. Soon after he proved up on his place, paid the Government price, and received his patent in October, 1864, this being the first patent received in the county. For a few years after settling here, the Indians made so much trouble that it retarded improvements. In June, 1862, he was obliged to take his wife and go to Clay Centre, on account of the Indians. On this trip his eldest child, a son, was born. In August he returned to his place, but was again driven out, but this time went to a place called Clifton, where a number of other settlers had gathered, and they put up a small fort, which was called Fort Clifton, remaining here until the next spring. The last time they were driven out was in 1864, when the Indians made a general raid all over the frontier. This was in the fall, and he remained away until July, 1865. After that time he was not bothered by Indians, except as they came begging. At this time settlers had come in, and a militia company had been raised, strong enough to protect them, about every settler in the county belonging to the company. His farm is finely situated on Salt Creek, which furnishes plenty of water, and the creek is well skirted with about fifty acres of timber on the place; has 130 acres under the plow, five acres of forest, and fruit planted around his residence, has 160 acres fenced for pasture, 90 acres of meadow, has one mile of hedge; owns 370 acres of land in all; has a good barn 28x34 feet, granary 16x24 feet, house 20x22 feet. Is extensively engaged in stock-raising; has 77 head of cattle, 120 head of hogs, and usually raises 150 head of hogs. He was married in 1861 to Miss B. Harrington of Iowa. They have nine children: Fremont, Ida May, Ines, Eddie A. U. S. G., Orra, Hugh, David, Jr., and Robert.

COLONEL DAVID C. GAMBLE, real estate dealer, was born in Geneseo, Livingston Co., N. Y., in 1837, and was raised there until sixteen years of age; then started out for himself and emigrated to Illinois, locating in Lake County, and took a two years' course at Lake Zurich Academy, after which he engaged in teaching in Cumberland, Shelby and Scott counties until the war broke out. In 1861 he enlisted as a private in Company B, Twelfth Illinois Infantry; after serving three months was elected First Lieutenant and returned home to recruit, and was taken sick and for six weeks was unable to do duty. He then resigned his position and in September enlisted as a private in Company E, Sixty-sixth Illinois Infantry, then known as Birge's sharp shooters; in June, 1863, was promoted—received a Captain's commission, and in 1864 was raised to a Major, and in 1865 was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel of his regiment; was in twenty-two pitched battles, besides skirmishes innumerable; was with Sherman on his march to the sea; had his left arm shattered at Dallas, Georgia, May 29, 1864. After his return from the army he located at Nashville two years as salesman in a large book house; then located in Logan and Mason Counties, Ill., where he engaged in farming until 1870; then emigrated to Kansas, locating in Republic County, taking a homestead on Section 24, Scandia Township, and remaining there a little over two years; then located at Seapo and invested in town lots and succeeded in getting about 417 of these lots and began handling real estate; was also appointed postmaster, holding the office three or four years; at that time his business was very limited and Mrs. Gamble took charge of the office. Mr. Gamble taught several terms of school and was clerk in a store for a short time; in 1875 was elected County Superintendent, serving through 1875 and 1876. Since then his business has so increased that his whole time is occupied in the handling of real estate. In this business he does more than all the others who are engaged in the same line in the county, and in August, 1882, established a branch office in Clyde, Cloud County, Mr. J. P. York having charge of this office. They have some 40,000 acres of wild and improved lands for sale and are having all the business they can attend to; at one time had 60,000 acres of land to dispose of. Mr. Gamble thinks that real estate business is only in its infancy and says that the fact of so much land being thrown upon the market is not because people are selling out, but it is brought about by the homestead, pre-emption and timber claims, loans which give the early settlers an opportunity to secure a three-quarter section of land and after getting a patent for them they are disposing of a part of their lands and using the proceeds for improving the balance and to engage in the stock business. Mr. Gamble is an extensive farmer; has 800 acres of land, 300 of which are under cultivation, which he is renting. When Mr. Gamble came to Kansas had a team and all his possessions amounting to about $200, which demonstrates the fact that a man of pluck and one who is not afraid to work cannot help but meet with success in Kansas. Mr. Gamble has always taken an active interest in the politics of Republic County; is a staunch Republican and a warm advocate of the party's interests. In 1875 was a candidate for the Legislature and openly through the press advocated funding of the county debts by bonds and was defeated in this measure, but when his opponent was elected a petition was sent to him with 1,200 signatures to influence the members and to carry the very measure suggested by Mr. Gamble; it was carried and the county scrip doubled in value from 50 cents on the $1, and is now at par. Is also notary public, the only one in the southern portion of the county. Was married in 1868 in Decatur, Ill., to Mrs. Eliza Bolles Finney, daughter of Major H. D. Bolles, of Scott County, Ill. Mrs. Gamble was born in Hartford, Conn. They have one son, Edward, born December 18, 1869. Mr. Gamble is a member of John Brown Post No. 44, G. A. R., Belleville; also member of Belleville Lodge No. 129, A., F. & A. M. Col. Gamble was elected to the Legislature from the eightieth district of Republic County, in November, 1882, as the nominee of the Republican party; he is a strong anti-monopolist.

CONRAD MYERS, farmer, P. O. Seapo, was born in Somerset County, Pa., in 1821, and was raised there until ten years of age; his parents then located in Blair, remaining there until eighteen years of age. His father was a millwright and young Myers learned this trade, working with his father. In 1834 they emigrated to Iowa, locating in Linn County, where they remained four years; thence to Butler County; while here his parents died and the support of the family, consisting of one brother and three sisters, fell upon him; he still continued working at his trade until 1860, when he and his brother concluded to make Kansas their home and early in the spring started for Kansas, reaching the State in July, locating in Riley County, where they put in a crop and then came to Republic County and picked out three farms on Salt Creek, in what is known as Grant Township

They were about the first settlers in the county, and Mr. Myers is the oldest settler left in the county. The following spring settled on his place and has lived on it constantly since. In March following the Homestead Act he walked eighty miles to homestead his place; was one of the first places filed on; the claim is a choice one, Salt Creek running through the place and Ruby Creek uniting with Salt Creek in his place; there are about sixty acres of good timber along the creeks. At the time of his settlement there were a good many Indians and it was dangerous to go away from home. Grasshopper Falls, 140 miles distant, was the nearest mill and for two years had no post-office within eighty miles. His crops were number one but for seven years there was no market, so he did not realize anything on them more than what he consumed; has sixty acres under the plow, a good orchard of apple, peach, pear and cherry trees; one and one-half mile of hedge and the whole place fenced, new frame house 28x38 feet two stories, fine large corn-crib 30x30 feet, a good stable, and is raising considerable stock; has about seventy-five Poland China hogs and raises about that number each year; is also raising some very fine horses. Was bothered some by the Indians, but did not leave his place; is the only man who did not leave the county during the Indian scares. At one time—about 1862—was out capturing buffalo calves and had caught two when he was surprised and surrounded by Indians, but he managed to keep them at a distance and was offered no violence. Mr. Myers was one of the first County Commissioners at the time the county was organized, serving one term. He was married in the fall of 1862 at Grasshopper Falls, Kan., to Miss L. Shafer of Lake Sibley; they have five children—George, May Ida, Jacob, Margaret and Lillie. Has done well since he came here after the county had settled enough to create a demand for produce.

Powell, he opened the first nursery in Republic County, consisting of twenty acres of various kinds of fruits, and had 150,000 apple trees ready for market, when the grasshoppers in 1874 destroyed nearly all the plants, about $5,000 worth in all. Mr. Clark and his brother put up the second saw-mill in the county, which was located at the mouth of White Rock Creek. After this they were not troubled, but a great deal of damage had been done, and a good many killed and run into other parts of the county by the Indians There were plenty of elk, buffalo, antelope and wild turkeys at this time. Scandia, was born in Chester County, Pa., in 1846; was raised there until fifteen years of age; then he went to Wilmington, Del., and went into Sullivan & Thompson's carriage factory to learn carriage-making, remaining there four years; then came West, locating in Chicago, where he was employed as foreman in Thompson and Edward's works, remaining there three years, and in 1870 came to Kansas, locating in Republic County, and took a homestead on Section 28, Union Township. He has 105 acres under cultivation, 40 acres fenced, and the balance is hay land. He has eight or ten acres of forest trees planted, and a small orchard of about one and one-fourth acres of various kinds; has the place hedged on three sides and 160 rods wire on the fourth side. The place shows the work of a good farmer. He is engaged to some extent in stock-raising. Has twenty head of cattle, and from thirty-five to forty head of hogs and usually markets one-half that many annually. He is one of the leading men in the township. He has been Township Trustee and Assessor three terms, besides holding some school offices a portion of the time he has been in the county. Prior to coming to Kansas he served two years at mechanical engineering. He was married in 1874 in Union Township to Miss Emma Ebling. They have four children—Nellie, William, Eugene and Kate.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

J. B. GAYLORD, farmer, and dealer in grain and lumber, etc., P. O. Harbine, was born in Lake County, Ohio, in 1845. When three years of age went to Wisconsin, locating in Waupun, remaining there a short time and then located in Marquette County, remaining there until the war broke out in 1861, when he enlisted in Company K, Tenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served three years and two months, received his discharge in 1864. After coming out of the army, returned to Wisconsin, remaining there until 1871, when he emigrated to Kansas, and located in Republic County, taking a homestead on Section 11, Township 1, Range 4. Was among the first settlers in Washington Township. Has remained on the place continuously since. Has 105 acres under the plow, two acres of forest and fruit trees, has good frame house, 12x20 feet; ell, 10x20 feet; good barn, 12x24 feet, and granary, 18x24 feet; is raising stock. In October, 1880, put in a warehouse at Harbine and commenced buying grain; also handles lumber and coal, and is working up a large trade in this business; is still carrying on his place and makes his home there; is a wide-awake, active, business man, the kind of a man to build up a town and business, and very popular with all. Was married in 1865 to Miss Lillian Bailey, of Wisconsin. They have seven children—Fred, Hepworth, Nellie Irene, Ray, Maggie, Mary, Chesley.

T. F. MARLATT, farmer, P. O. Republic City, was born in Allegheny County, Pa., in 1837. At the age of fourteen years his parents located in Hamilton County, Ohio, near Cincinnati, where he remained until the war broke out, in 1861, when he enlisted in the Fifty-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, serving three years. Was discharged at East Port, Ga., in 1864. After coming out of the army he returned to Hamilton County, Ohio. In 1870 emigrated to Kansas, locating in Republic County, and took a homestead on Section 31, Township 1, Range 4. Was among the first settlers in Washington Township. No roads, except the old Government trail, and sixty-five miles from any railroad. He has eighty-five acres under the plow, one and a quarter miles of hedge, an orchard consisting of ninety apple and 150 cherry trees, 3,000 cottonwood and other trees, new house, 24x14 feet, with ell, 14x14 feet, new granary and stables, and is engaged in raising stock. When the town of Republic City was laid out, Mr. Marlatt became one of the members of the Town Company and was chosen president of the same. He has thirty lots besides what he has disposed of; at one time sold his interest for $10 and paid $150 to get it back; the lots are now valued at about $500 to $600. Mr. Marlatt has done well, and now, instead of his farm being sixty-five miles from the railroad, is joining the town site and less than one mile from the station. He was married in 1859 to Miss Julia A. Kidd, of Ohio. They have four children—C. W., W. A., Charles E. and Julia. Is a member of the I. O. O. F., and has been Master of the Grange.

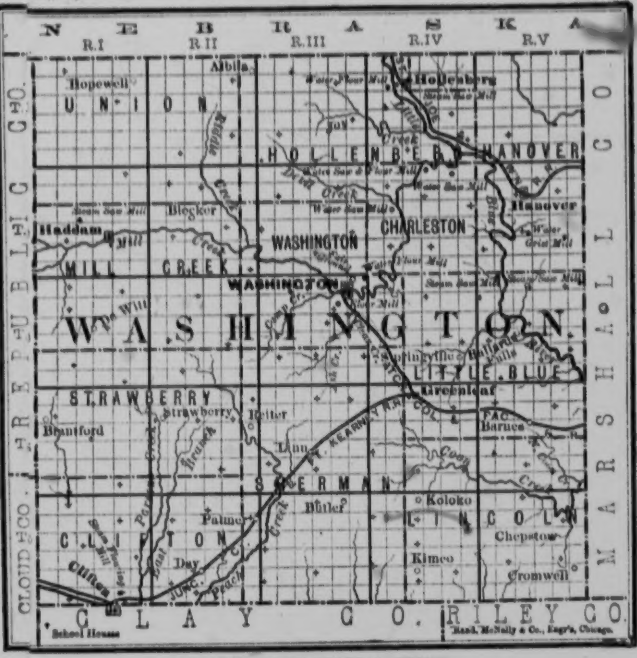
J. B. POLLARD, farmer, P. O. Republic City, was born in Owen County, Ind., in 1834, and was raised there until seventeen years of age, going from there to McLean County, Ill., and engaged in farming. In 1865 emigrated to Oregon, remaining there three years; from there to California, remaining one year; he then returned to Illinois, remaining there two years. In 1871 emigrated to Kansas, locating in Washington Township, Republic County. Took a homestead on Section 31. Was seventy-five miles from railroad and thirty miles to a mill. Has 100 acres under the plow, thirty acres of pasture, the farm runs up to the town site of Republic City, and he had forty acres in Big Bend Township, and has laid off ten acres into lots, which he has disposed of; also owned one-seventh of the town site when it was laid out, and has disposed of forty-five lots in all, of his share in the town plat; has done well here, as his land has been very valuable, lying as it does adjoining the town. He was married December 31, 1861, to Miss Van Arsdall, of Illinois. They have four children—Nora, Fannie, Horace H. and Harry. Is a member of the Anti-Horse Thief Association.

W. A. REEVES, farmer, P. O. Harbine, Kan., was born in Portage County, Ohio, in 1836, but was raised in Knox and Stark counties, Ill., until 1860, when he emigrated to Pike's Peak, and for six years was engaged in mining and freighting in the Western States and Territories. At the end of this time he returned East and located in Iowa, where he remained until 1871, when he gathered his wordly possessions together, consisting of team and wagon, and what he could put in a wagon, and started for Kansas. Reaching Republic County in the spring, he took a homestead on Section 11, Township 1, Range 4. Was among the first settlers in this township, and eighty miles from any railroad point. The first five years had to draw his water for family use five miles and with other drawbacks, which a new county is subject to, commenced to make a home of his claim. He had his crops destroyed by the grasshoppers in 1874, and for a time thought it would be about impossible to do anything, but now has 125 acres under the plow, four acres of fine forest, a peach orchard of 500 trees, besides apple and cherry trees, 100 plum trees, and a variety of small fruits. A good frame house, 16x24 feet, story and a half, stable, granary and cribs, and meadow of about twelve acres of tame grass, forty head of hogs, sixteen head of cattle, 6 head of horses, with tools and machinery for carrying on his place. It is but three miles from market. Has been Justice of the Peace of his township seven years, and one of the most enterprising citizens in the town, and highly respected by all. He was married in April, 1868, in Cass County, Iowa, to Miss E. A. Jordan, of that place. They have four children—William E., Ethel G., Mabel E. and Walter S. He was at the last election elected Representative for this, the Seventy-ninth District, to the Legislature, which convenes January 9, 1883.

WASHINGTON COUNTY.

LOCATION AND NATURAL FEATURES.

WASHINGTON County is fifth in the first tier of counties stretching west from the Missouri River. To the north lay Jefferson and Gage counties, Nebraska; east, Marshall County; south, Riley and Clay counties; west, Republic and Cloud. Washington County is embraced within that fertile terrritory which lies between the Blue and Republican rivers as they flow southeast into the Kansas River. The Little Blue River pays most particular attention to Washington County, draining, with its branches, all except its southwestern portions. This section, comprising Strawberry, Clifton and Sherman townships, is watered by Parson Creek, East Branch, Peach Creek, and other streams, which flow south into the Republican River. Mill Creek flows east through Mill Creek Township into the Little Blue River; Pierce Creek southeast through portions of Union, Hollenberg and Washington townships into the same; and Coon Creek takes the same general direction through Lincoln Township, and also empties into the Little Blue. The Little Blue proper drains the greater portion of the county included in Hanover, Charleston, Washington and Little Blue townships. Joy Creek, Devil Creek, and other tributaries of the Little Blue in the northern part of the county, serve to further advance its reputation as an abundantly watered section of the State. Springs also abound, good well water being reached all the way from ten to sixty feet. The streams are bordered with timber, the belt averaging from forty rods to half a mile in width. The native varieties are oak, walnut, hickory, elm, cottonwood, ash, locust and elder. Trees have been planted, more or less, throughout the county, the varieties which succeed best being cottonwood, box elder, soft maple, black walnut and elm. The best grazing land is found in the northern part of the county. Nearly 100,000 acres of land are yet in the market, but lands are, to a great extent, in the hands of railroads and speculators. The whole county is thus divided: Bottom land, 8 per cent; upland, 92 per cent; forest (Government survey), 2 per cent; prairie, 98 per cent; average width of bottoms, one-half mile; general surface of the country, undulating.



Washington County contains 900 square miles, being exactly 30 miles square. Of the 532,000 taxable acres of land in the county, less than 28 per cent is under cultivation. Corn and wheat are the great products. Live stock is also a "paying" investment. The herd law has been in force for ten years, and the general sentiment throughout the county is in its favor. Besides farming and stock-raising, horticulture is receiving considerable attention, and excellent varieties of fruits are raised.

Wild fruits grow in plenty, such as plums, strawberries, grapes, raspberries, mulberries and gooseberries. There are five different kinds of native grasses—the tame, such as timothy, clover, blue grass and alfalfa are successfully grown.

An excellent quality of common and magnesian limestone is found in most parts of the county except the southwestern. Sandstone exists in fair quantities in the eastern, northern and western tiers of townships. At Hollenberg are found fine limestone quarries, while pottery clay is being utilized at Hanover. The few traces of coal which have been discovered have not, so far, led to any valuable results.

EARLY HISTORY.

Strictly speaking, the earliest history of Washington County commences in 1542, when Coronado's Expedition marched from Mexico to the northern boundary of Kansas, crossing the Little Blue River near the eastern boundary of Washington County. In 1820 Major Long's expedition crossed that portion of the "Great American Desert" now known as Washington County. A few years thereafter this portion of the State became seamed with roads converging towards Santa Fe, and traders, missionaries and herders repeatedly trod its soil, but not to make it a permanent abiding place. In 1845 the Mormons passed through the county, on their way to their new home in Utah. One of their favorite camping grounds was at "Mormon Springs," on Ash Creek, three miles south of Washington City. Close to these springs is a high rock, composed of red sandstone, upon which were carved the names of many of these Latter Day Saints, with date of their visit. The emigration has now passed on and left no sign behind in this locality.

West of Washington about eight miles, on the old military road, there is still a large sandstone upon which are carved the names of many early settlers. Formerly the Mormon emigrants had inscribed their names thereon, but these traces are now obliterated. The line of the road, however, can be plainly traced through the county, especially northwest of the Little Blue, about the mouth of Sandy Creek, near the Sixth Principal Meridian.

The early history of Washington County proper, however, begins with its first settlement by a white person. In July, 1857, James McNulty came from Iowa with his family and settled in Marysville. Here he spent the summer, fall, and a portion of the winter, but choosing a locality further west, selected a beautiful piece of land about five miles west of the present city of Washington, on Mill Creek. This was in February, 1858. Mr. McNulty returned to Marysville for his family, having erected a cabin for their accommodation—the first building in the county. It was afterwards sold and moved to the head of Turkey Creek, where, in a renovated and improved condition, it is now occupied. When Mr. McNulty returned to Washington Township he brought with him Ralph Ostrander, who settled adjoining him, on what is known as the "Lavering Place."

In May, 1858, Gerat H. Hollenberg, one of the most respected and useful citizens who ever lived in Washington County, settled on the Fort Kearney road and started a ranch which he called "Cottonwood." Mr. Hollenburg was born in Hanover, December 19, 1823, coming to this country and going to California during the gold fever excitement in 1849. He accumulated money, went to Australia with a mining party, returned to New York, started for Kansas and established a ranch on the Black Vermillion, Marshall County, in 1857. In May, 1858, he married his wife and brought her with him to Washington County. For seventeen years, as a private citizen and public officer, Mr. Hollenberg labored for the county's advancement. At one time he was a Representative, and acted as County Commissioner for many years. In 1869 he laid out the city of Hanover, and worked for it night and day. In the summer of 1874, being in poor health, sailed for his native country, but died on passage, July 1, 1874, and was buried in the ocean. A fine monument was erected to his memory in Hanover cemetery upon which is the inscription, which is well merited, "Founder of Hanover and Father of Washington County." John and M. Lott settled near the "Cottonwood" ranch the next year—at least in the same township.

In the spring of 1858 George G. Pierce and D. E. Ballard settled in Washington County, and in the spring of 1859 selected the site of a town, about a mile and one-half north of the center of the county. The location was abandoned the coming fall, however, and the present site chosen in the spring of 1860. In the fall of 1858 Jacob and Daniel Blocker staked their claims on Mill Creek, in the township by that name, being the only settlers west of Washington City, except McNulty and Ostrander. In the winter of 1858–'59 George Foster settled on the place, afterwards bought by James Brown, in Lincoln Township. William Tarbox settled in Little Blue Township, northeast quarter Section 35, in March, 1858, and William Mercer, on the creek which now bears his name, in June. Rufus Darby and M. Woodward, with their families, located near Ballard Crossing, in July, but when the Government survey was made, they found they were upon school lands, and the next year moved up on Mill Creek. In 1858 S. F. Snider, the first Probate Judge of the county and who held the office for several years, first came to this section and built three cabins in the southwestern part of Charleston Township. The next spring Jonathan Snider and S. Stonebreaker located permanently in this vicinity, and S. F. Snider did not "come to stay" until the spring of 1860, when he brought with him John and Richard Bond and Fred Fisher. In the summer of 1859 N. and Peter Eslinger located on Parson's Creek. W. Parson, from whom the creek took its name, settled a[illegible]lifton during 1859. The above mentioned comprise the principal settlers who had homes in Washington County, up to the fall of 1859.

FIRST EVENTS.

In May, 1859, a man named Daniel Sigmun, from Missouri, who had been visiting friends in this section, was found lying dead upon the old Mormon trail, about three miles southeast of Washington. The man was stabbed in the side and shot under the chin. Messrs. E. B. Cook and W. Way had been with William Hemphill, on the Republican River near the bend, assisting Judge Adams to build a ferry-boat so as to make a more direct route between Atchison and Denver. They discovered the body, and at first supposed that Sigmun had committed suicide, the location of the gun-wound seeming to point to that theory. But the grass was found to be trampled around him, and other evidences were discovered of a desperate struggle. Mr. Way feared that he might be suspected of the murder, and a strong suspicion in those days was almost equivalent to a lynching. He therefore left the body where it was and it was buried by some California emigrants. The friends of Mr. Sigmun learning of his fate began their search for the murderer. Two theories were advanced. The same day that Mr. Sigmun was found dead a band of Otoe Indians had passed along the trail, closely pursued by the settlers from Wild Cat Creek from whom they had stolen horses. They might have found the man in their path and killed him. Also, upon the day that Sigmun was found dead, a certain James McCarty had sold out his claim on Coon Creek and was traveling the murdered man's way. Many of the settlers decided upon the latter theory, and in June McCarty was arrested. There was, as yet, no officer of justice in the county, but McCarty was arrested and confined in a little log house this side of Waterville. The citizens then induced Rufus Darby, who was every day expecting an appointment as Justice of the Peace, to try the prisoner before a citizens' court. He was not qualified to administer oaths, and consequently the witnesses were not sworn. The testimony, however, was so purely circumstantial, and "lame" at that, that McCarty was discharged by the prospective Justice of the Peace. During the same month Mr. Darby received his appointment, and the suspected murderer was tried again, with a like fortunate result. The trial, the second time, was held at Mr. Darby's house, and the testimony of the defense seemed to prove an alibi, quite strongly. The crowd in attendance was large and highly excited, and had the verdict been different, McCarty, no doubt, would have met the close embrace of "Judge Lynch."

The first preachers, says Dr. Williamson, that visited this county, were Elder Hartford and Elder Robertson, of the Episcopal Methodist Church. On their first advent to Washington, they called at a house about sundown, to stay all night. The men in the house thought it was some of the boys playing a practical joke on them, so they halloed back some western adjectives. That alarmed our preachers, and they left, starting down Mill Creek. By this time, the proprietor came home and told the boys their mistake. They started out forthwith across the fields to call them back or head them off, but this had the effect of scaring the preachers worse, thinking robbers were after them. They rode out a few miles on the prairie, unsaddled their hosres and laid down to sleep supperless. In the morning they started again, and soon came in sight of M. G. Driskell's. After breakfast they went back to Washington, holding a meeting that evening in the log house on the John Penwell farm. This was Brother Hartford's first sermon as a preacher, and the first religious services in Washington County. The next morning Elder Hartford, with a few biscuits in his pocket, started to his work on the Republican, but sundown found him lost and beyond the settlements. Taking the prairie and his saddle-bags for a bed that night, he took a fresh start again at early sunrise. After traveling some fifteen miles, he came to a solitary house, the site of which is now the city of Clay Center. From there he went to Little Mill Creek, his home. This was in the year 1860.

INDIAN TROUBLES.

So far as is known no one was ever killed by Indians within the limits of Washington County, but the people of the county, especially during the raids of 1863 and 1864, were often panic-stricken, and twice deserted the county en masse. Until the breaking out of the war, and the denuding of the military forts of troops, the Cheyennes, Arapahoes and other wild tribes were kept in check. They did not claim that their rights were molested as long as settlers kept east of a line drawn from the Great Bend of the Arkansas river to the Republican. As soon, however, as they realized that most of the troops were engaged in other business than keeping them quiet they commenced to make their demonstrations, quarreling with the Otoes and falling upon the whites. In the spring of 1864 bands of Sioux, Cheyennes and Arapahoes appeared along the Little Blue, in Washington and Marshall counties, on the war path—following the Otoes toward their village. They were armed with bows and arrows, spears and raw-hide shields. They first plundered John Ferguson's house, on Mill Creek; then O. S. Canfield's. They found Mrs. Canfield in the house alone, and a dozen of them outraged her most horribly. Rufus Darby was just returning from Marysville, riding a pony, upon which he had thrown a bag of provisions. He was entirely unarmed, and his feelings may be imagined when he observed fifteen or twenty of the wild-men of the plains dashing along toward him, brandishing their long spears and otherwise conducting themselves like bloodthirsty fiends. They surrounded him quite, grunting savagely. "Pawnees?" asked their prisoner, in fear and trembling, but hoping for the best. "Cheyennes," answered they in chorus, glaring at him savagely. He thought that now his time had surely come, especially as they told him, with a scowl, when he remarked that he was going to his wigwam, "No go wigwam; this way." All except two of the Indians then galloped away in the direction indicated—toward Mr. Hallowell's. His provision bag, which had tumbled from his pony, was replaced, and with an Indian guarding him on each side Mr. Darby was silently guided toward the Hallowell house. When he arrived he found young Mort Hollowell, a stout, plucky young fellow of eighteen, engaged in a hand-to-hand conflict with a Cheyenne brave for the possession of his new Sunday overcoat. The savages had not, so far, offered to take away anything without leaving a buffalo robe in exchange. Young Hallowell wanted to keep his coat, and the Cheyenne buck wanted it too. When Mr. Darby came upon the scene the Hollowells were so surprised that hostilities ceased, and the Cheyenne warrior darted off into the bushes with his precious plunder. Mr. Darby entered the house, and, seeing a gun standing against the wall, picked it up and fingered it carelessly, not knowing whether it was loaded or not. The Cheyennes, however, took the alarm and scattered pell-mell. The Hallowells and Mr. Darby went in pursuit, armed with three guns, and Mortimer recovered his best coat. Although the Darbys and the Hallowells escaped luckily, others were not so fortunate. A general panic ensued, and most of the settlers in the county fled south and gathered at the house of Orville Huntress, near the present site of Clay Center. About two hundred people encamped there until the scare was over. Following is Dr. Williamson's account:

"The first place they struck was Mr. Furguson's, afterwards Mr. Canfield's, one of the oldest settlers on the Creek, plundering the houses and insulting the women. Traveling on down Mill Creek, in the vicinity of Mr. Wertman's, the Indians took prisoner Rufus Darby. With one on each side of him, armed with spears, they took him down to Washington to the log house of Jesse R. Hallowell, where another band of Indians were plundering his house of bedding (they called it swapping). Leaving there they followed down Mill Creek, plundering on their way G. M. Driskell of bedding and blankets. Rich Bond they corralled on the mound above John Bond's barn. Andy Oswalt was also taken prisoner. After taking them a few miles down the creek they let them go. Many of the citizens took the alarm and started for Marysville, in Marshall County. The citizens that were left then held a meeting in Washington, at what is now called the Collins' stable, the result of which was that William Cummings and D. E. Ballard were appointed to reconnoitre the whereabouts of the Indians, and ascertain their number. Saddling their ponies, armed and equipped with rifles, revolvers, and blankets, they started south. Night found them at Parson Creek, hungry, tired, and cold, but no Indians. By this time the boys found they had no matches. I suppose they rubbed two sticks together, but it wouldn't work, so they hung up a blanket, shot into it and made it smoke, then raised the wind, took puff about till they got a fire, and got some supper. The next morning bright and early our scouts started south again, but still no Indians. But resting at noon they found what proved to be bituminous coal. Filling a blanket with the same, they returned home, showing their treasure, which is now known by the name of the Clyde coal banks.

"Still later in the fall of the same year there were Indian troubles, and J. R. Hallowell, Mort Hallowell, and the women and settlers around, forted up in the Humes' log house in Washington, keeping guard over night. Just at sunrise a dark object was seen crawling up the ravine by the parsonage. Some of them wanted to shoot, but about that time Elijah Woolbert, Sr., raised up, waved his broad brim hat and shouted at the top of his voice, "Halloa, you wouldn't shoot a native, would you?" The following fall scouts brought word from the west that the Indians were attacking the settlements. The citizens of Mill Creek, with their cattle, oxen, and wagons, pushed to Washington, camping on the high land, on what is known as the George Shriner farm, south of Washington. That night might be heard the lowing of cattle, the lamentation of the women and children, the bleating of the sheep, for they were leaving with their chickens and all their household goods. Some pushed on the next day to Harden's Ford, returning home in a few weeks, as the excitement subsided.

In August, 1864, the Cheyennes and Arapahoes came up the Little Blue valley again, waging war against the settlers of Colorado and Western Kansas. Near Oak Grove, six miles above Hanover, a family named Eubanks were scalped and murdered, several men killed in that vicinity, and a young lady named Laura Roper carried into captivity. Most of the settlers in this county fled to Marysville, where a public meeting was called to discuss ways and means of self-protection. Rufus Darby was chairman of that meeting and G. H. Hollenberg treasurer. Money was raised to pay scouts $4 or $5 per day to scour the country and report any traces of the enemy. This was done for several days, the excitement died away, and the settlers of Washington County and other alarmed districts returned to their homes. The Indians were afterwards pursued by the State militia and driven toward the source of the Republican. A company was raised in this county, Mr. Hollenberg being active in the muster and commanding a regiment. The Indians were driven toward the source of the Republican. From all reliable accounts the State troops had the plundering propensity quite strongly developed. The advantage gained by the settlers who owned property was that they were not in danger of their lives from the soldier boys, but they kept a sharp eye upon their hens and pigs and all eatables of a fascinating nature to healthy appetites. Neither could the boys resist a buffalo hunt, and several delays were occasioned in their pursuit of savages by their unsoldierly pursuit of the shaggy monsters. In 1868 the Indians made another raid through Washington, Cloud, and Republic counties. Their depredations here were confined to thieving, the raid of 1864 being the only one which was noticeably destructive of life in this vicinity.

POLITICAL ORGANIZATION AND ELECTIONS.

The boundaries of Washington Township were defined by the Territorial Legislature of January, 1857. It was attached to Marshall County for judicial and municipal purposes. In the fall of 1858 occurred the first election ever held within the present limits of Washington County, to choose a representative of the Sixth District Dr. J. P. Miller was elected, receiving 300 votes; T. S. Vail, Miller's successor, fifty-eight. The township cast just thirty ballots upon this important occasion. In April, 1859, George G. Pierce was elected supervisor of the township, D. E Ballard, clerk, and William Tarbox, treasurer. On the second Monday in April, 1860, the township was organized into a county, and Mr. Pierce represented it in the last session of the Territorial Legislature of 1861, Mr. Ballard being its first State Representative during the same year. On the fourth Monday of April, 1860, occurred the election for county officers, resulting as follows: Commissioners, George E. Cadwell, Joseph Malin, William Hoffhine; Clerk, David E. Ballard; Treasurer, M. G. Driskell; Registrar, David E. Ballard; Sheriff, William Langsdale; Surveyor, James O'Neal; Attorney, Thomas M. Bowen; Superintendent of Public Instruction, John M. Hoffhine; Probate Judge, S. F. Snider; Assessor, William M. Mercer; Coroner, Charles H. Bruce. When Judge Snider's name was first proposed he had been a resident of Kansas but a few days, having resigned the office of County Judge in Page County, Iowa, and removed to Washington. He told his friends that he was not even a legally qualified voter, but he was induced to run, upon the plea of dearth of legal timber and his own known ability, and elected, serving the county well for a number of years. Rufus Darby is sometimes spoken of as the first Probate Judge of Washington County, but the position he held was Justice of the Peace, receiving his appointment from the governor in June, 1859.

The time for holding the election to decide upon the county-seat was fixed for November, 1860. Washington had been incorporated the previous fall, and in August, 1860, the town company donated a number of lots to the county to induce the voters to favor this location. There were two other competitors. "Rogersville" was Judge Snider's pet, located on his farm, four miles northeast of the center of the county, in what is now Charleston Township. About four miles west of Washington was a paper town (West Union), located on James McNulty's claim, and fathered by him, Ralph Ostrander and James Darby. On the afternoon of the election day Judge Snider withdrew Rogersville from the race, and threw its seven votes for Washington, thereby selecting this point as the county-seat. The town company had already erected a log house, and here the first commissioners' meeting was held, and the county divided into Washington and Mill Creek townships. In 1862 Clifton Township was created; in 1868 Lincoln Township, and the county divided into four equal townships. In 1870 Little Blue, Hanover, and Sherman Townships were formed; in 1872, Strawberry, Union and Hollenberg; in 1874 Charleston Township. In January, 1879, the Otoe Reservation lands, in Washington County, came into market and that tract was annexed to Hanover Township. In March, 1871, the Twelfth Judicial District was created, A. S. Wilson appointed District Judge and William Hoffhine, Clerk.

In the fall of 1860 E. Woolbert built a large two-story log house, where he kept hotel and postoffice at the same time. In 1865, when he resigned as postmaster, he sold his house to S. F. Snider for $250. In 1868 Mr. Snider sold the building to the county, and it became known as the old stockade court house. Burning down in the spring of 1869, it was re-built by the county in 1871, and burned a second time December 15, 1872. Most of the county records were burned, as the fire occurred early on Sunday morning, and was not discovered until it had obtained great headway. The building was insured for $2,000 and was rebuilt by the Insurance Company in July, 1873. This is the present court house, a plain, unpretending two-story structure, which will doubtless soon be replaced by a more pretentious building.

Present county officers: Clerk, J. O. Young; Treasurer, H. C. Sprengle; Probate Judge, S. H. Maunder; Sheriff, T. M. Dolan; Register of Deeds, Charles W. Aldrach; Superintendent of Public Instruction, H. C. Robinson; Surveyor, Orlando Sawyer; Coroner, Dr. H. Markham; District Judge, A. S. Wilson; Clerk of the District Court, R. O. SCHOOLS, ETC.

School District No. 1 was organized in 1861, Miss Agnes Hallowell, now Mrs. Philip Darby, being the first teacher. The school was held at first in the "Company's House," but in 1869 the district issued bonds and the "old stone" schoolhouse was built. These were the first bonds issued for educational purposes in the county. In 1864 school district No. 2 was organized in Charleston Township. The county is now divided into 120 districts. Of the 6,000 persons of school age, nearly 5,000 are enrolled in the district schools and about 60 per cent of this number are in attendance. The county is settling up so rapidly that six new buildings are about to be erected for educational purposes. The value of school property is some $50,000, and 110 teachers are employed, the average wages of females being $27 per month and of males $33⅓.

In 1860 the population of Washington County was 383; in 1870, 4,081; in 1875, 8,621; in 1878, 10,319; in 1882, 15,068. By townships and cities it is now divided as follows: Charleston, 501; Washington, 982; Sherman, 2,050; Washington City, 1,020; Strawberry, 1,288; Union, 672; Mill Creek, 1,321; Clifton, 1,580; Hollenburg, 1,047; Hanover, 1,563; Little Blue, 1,301; Lincoln, 1,399; Hanover City, 627; Greenleaf City, 373.

The value of all taxable lands in the county is $1,565,170; of town lots, $153,043; of personal property, $618,162; of railroad property, $361,141.74—total, $2,697,516.74. Her citizens possess over 6,000 horses, 6,000 milch cows, 10,000 other cattle, 11,000 sheep and 21,000 swine. The above figures speak for themselves in proclaiming a prosperous county.

The Washington County Exposition was organized July 9, 1881, with officers as follows: A. G. Murphy, president; F. M. Lavering, vice-president; P. A. Head, secretary; E. N. Emmons, financial secretary; E. C. Knowles, treasurer. The exposition owns fifty-six acres of ground, sixteen acres being included in a good trotting park. The grounds are fenced with hedge, exhibition buildings have been erected, and more are to follow. The track is a half mile one. During the coming year (1883) a large floral hall is to be erected. The capital stock of the exposition is $5,000; number of shareholders in October, 1882, seventy-five, and officers: F. M. Lavering, president; William M. Allen, vice president; C. W. Aldrach, secretary; Charles Smith, financial secretary; J. O. Young, treasurer.

Washington County Horticultural Society, an auxiliary to the State Society, was organized April 3, 1880, by Dr. Charles Williamson, a prominent member of the State organization. Its present officers are: Dr. Williamson, president; G. C. Penwell, vice-president; E. J. Nason, secretary; Wm. Cummings, treasurer. At present the society numbers about sixty members, its object being to encourage and promote the growth of fruit, shrubbery, shade, ornamental and forest trees, and hedging for fencing.

WASHINGTON CITY.

In September, 1859, George G. Pierce and David E. Ballard platted the town of Washington Center at the center of the township, then comprising the county. Papers were taken out before Rufus Darby, Justice of the Peace, by Messrs. Pierce, Ballard, Rezin C. and J. W. Darby, and M. H. Lott, on the 9th of that month and year. It was soon found, however, that the location was a little off the direct line of travel from Marysville, and the site was therefore changed to the present one, one mile north of the center. During the spring of 1860, when the township was changed into a county, the new town was platted by Mr. Pierce, assisted, as chairman, by E. Woolbert. The members of the Town Company were: Mr. Pierce, president; Mr. Ballard, clerk; H. Lott, J. W. Darby and T. Bowen, Mr. Bowen having acquired his interest from R. C. Darby. Upon the second Monday in November, 1860, Washington was selected as the county-seat. A log house had been erected by the Company, called the "Company's House," each member of the Company contributing seven logs towards its erection. In the mean time Rezin Darby, son of Rufus, and one of the members of the original Company, had, during the season's terrible drought, gone to Guthrie County, Iowa, for provisions. He was accompanied by his two brothers. In December Phil Darby returned with provisions and seed for the spring planting. The other two remained, and joined the army in the spring. Rezin was mustered into the Fourth Iowa Infantry, and was shot through the left lung, at the battle of Pea Ridge, March 7, 1862. He died from the effects of his wound a few days later. As will be seen, further on, Mr. Pierce, the energetic president of the Town Company, also gave his life in his country's service.

Soon after the "Company's house" had been erected two shanties were built in which Chris. Straum and Elgin Richards resided, that the Company might hold the two quarters comprising the town site. These men proved up their claims separately, and then deeded the land to the Company. The eighty acres of land lying south of East Washington was formerly part of the site. D. E. Ballard afterwards bought up the lots, canceled the plat and transferred the property to S. F. Snider, who disposed of it to H. C. Sprengle. In connection with the railroad company Mr. Sprengle re-platted a portion of it. Returning to the old Company house, built by Messrs. Pierce and Ballard, it is found that in 1861 Miss Agnes Hallowell (now Mrs. Philip Darby) opened the first school there. Thomas Bowen occupied the second house on the town site, it being erected by M. G. Driskell, who had settled near him. In July, 1860, Mr. Bowen put in a stock of dry goods and groceries. In the fall E. Woolbert built a hotel of six-inch logs, put up endwise, stockade fashion. This became the old "Stockade Court House." A partial drawing of city lots was made in August, 1860, some to be owned by the Town Company, and others were given to the county as an inducement to locate the county-seat here at the coming November election. When the war broke out George G. Pierce and Thomas Bowen went into the United States army, leaving the town to be governed by D. E. Ballard. Mr. Pierce is a noted and popular character in the early doings of Washington County. He was well educated, popular, and full of young yet well-directed energy. Mr. Pierce came from Wyoming County, N. Y., with Judge J. G. Adams. He was the first representative in the Legislature, and active in everything relating to the advancement of the city's and county's interests. When the war broke out, he with most of the ardent and patriotic young men of the county, left Washington to enter broader battle fields of strife. Mr. Pierce was shot at Petersburg, taken to Washington, D. C., where he was cared for by Jim Lane, but died in about a week. Death surely had hit a shining mark.

As was the universal fact, the war had the effect to bring Washington City to a standstill, but in 1866 immigration commenced to flow this way again, among those coming with the tide being Dr. Williamson, the first physician, and George W. Shriner. Two years later came James F. Tallmann and Charles Smith. In 1869 the first newspaper, the Western Observer, made its obeisance to the public, and the stone schoolhouse was built for $9,000. Bonds were issued to that amount—the first in the county. The same year came J. W. Cullimore to open his pioneer hardware store, and Thomas Haak started his lumber-yard. In 1869 A. C. Baumbarger first made his appearance as a shoemaker, and J. C. McCew as a furniture dealer; Hon. A. S. Wilson opened a law office. Within the next few years business and professional men of all kinds settled in Washington, and "early times" may be said to have ended with the year 1869.

Upon the petition of "George Shriner and fifty-five others" to Judge Wilson, of the District Court, Washington town was incorporated as a city May 3, 1875. The first election, held on the 10th, resulted as follows: Mayor, J. S. Vedder; Clerk, E. N. Emmons; Police Judge, T. J. Humes; City Attorney, J. W. Rector; Treasurer, Charles Smith; Marshal, M. Patrie. Mr. Vedder has acted as Mayor three years and is the present City Clerk. Thomas Groody is serving his third term as Mayor. Charles Smith, present City Attorney, is serving his fifth term, having acted as Treasurer three years.

In January, 1877, the Central Branch Extension of the Union Pacific road reached Washington, and the city experienced a decided revival in business prosperity. Since then nearly all her brick business structures have been erected, and her streets really commence to present a solid metropolitan appearance. She has now an abundance of general stores and those devoted to special lines. Washington is pleasantly situated, settled by an intelligent and industrious class of citizens, and though she has experienced no mushroom growth, she is growing and is bound to grow. Her population is about 1,100. In the fall of 1881 a fine brick schoolhouse, three stories in height, was erected, at a cost of $15,000. It is being conducted more as an academy than a common school, and is obtaining a reputation outside the county. The building has accommodations for 500 children, and is so constructed that when it is found necessary, an additional wing can be erected without marring the symmetry of the present imposing structure.

CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1861. Rev. Messrs. R. I. Hartford and Robertson, missionary circuit riders, being the pastors in charge. Then came in succession, after their term of service, Rev. James Phillips, 1863 and 1864; Rev. Taggart, 1865; Rev. James Phillips, 1866 and 1867; Rev. E. Chilson and Rev. M. P. Welty, 1868 and 1869; Rev. E. J. Fulford, 1870; Rev. Robertson and Rev. John Woodburn, 1871; Rev. E. W. Vandeventer, 1872 and 1873; Rev. E. R. Brown, 1874–'76; Rev. A. N. See, 1877 and 1878. In September of the latter year the society erected a neat church edifice, they having previously occupied private houses, the school building and the Presbyterian Church. In 1879, Rev. J. C. Dana became pastor, and was succeeded in 1880 by Rev. Henry Frank. During this year Washington was made a station. Mr. Frank was followed by Rev. B. F. Kephart, who remained until August, 1881, when Rev. R. H. Hoffman assum[illegible] pastorate and had charge of the church until March, 1882. Then Rev. A. H. Walter, the present incumbent, became pastor. In September, 1882, the membership of the church was about 130. The society is out of debt, and is one of the most flourishing religious organizations in the county.

First Presbyterian Church was organized in 186[illegible], by Rev. Gary Hickman, a missionary of the Presbytery of Highland. The society numbered ten members, but before the services of Mr. Hickman could be obtained to preach to the little band had scattered, some of the members having moved out of the county, and others joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. A second organization was effected through the efforts of Revs. W. G. Thomas and Edward Cooper, in October, 1869, the membership numbering fifteen. Rev. W. G. Thomas, now of Kansas City, who had been preaching temporarily, was elected stated supply for one year, and continued thus to act for several years. In January, 1874, a new church was dedicated, Rev. Edward Cooper, now of Cincinnati, preaching the sermon upon the occasion. Rev. L. G. Fisher had been called to supply the church in 1873, and remained its stated supply until 1875. For two years the society remained without stated services, but in June, 1877, Rev. George Hageman, the present pastor, was called to the field. The church now numbers nearly 100 members, and is growing in strength and usefulness.

THE PRESS AND OTHER BUSINESS INTERESTS.

On March 11, 1869, appeared the first number of the first paper published in Washington County, the Western Observer, its editor and proprietor being Mark J. Kelley. It was a little 7x9 inch sheet, office in the old stockade court house. The advent of a newspaper is generally an important event in any town. It signifies either that its turning point for the better has come, or is to be brought about through its agency. The turning point for Washington had already come, and hereafter she was never without a newspaper to foster her growth and prosperity. The Observer was the means of drawing to Washington some of her most influential citizens, a large immigration having come into the county one year before, in the spring and summer of 1868. In May, 1870, the paper was sold to George W. Shriner and James F. Tallman, and its name changed to the Magnet. On the 25th of August, 1870, appeared the first number of the Washington Republican, editors and proprietors, M. J. Kelley and J. O. Young. Mr. Tallman soon retired from the Magnet, and in January, 1871, J. O. Young purchased that journal from Mr. Shriner, and Mr. Kelley's interest in the Republican, consolidating the two papers under the name, Republican and Magnet. After a few months it became plain Republican. John I. Tallman and W. P. Day, successively became proprietors during the next year, Mr. Young purchasing Mr. Day's interest in February, 1872, and selling the same to J. C. Martin and Perrine Stultz, during the following July. Mr. Martin afterwards bought out Mr. Stultz, and sold to John Guian in January, 1874. E. N. Emmons, who had been associated with Mr. Martin for a number of months in the publication of the Republican, purchased half of the establishment of Mr. Guinn, in June, 1874. In July he enlarged the paper to a seven column folio. In October, 1876, J. B. Besack, its present editor, bought Mr. Emmons' interest in the Republican and enlarged it to an eight column folio. Its name indicates its politics. The Republican is well printed and ably conducted, and is a reliable exponent of the standing and progress of the city and county of Washington.

Washington Register.—This new and brisk young candidate for journalistic honors was first issued April 10, 1880, by Dr. Charles Williamson and Samuel Clarke, its place of publication being Palmer. In August it was removed to Washington City. In July, 1882, W. A. Clark became associated with Mr. Clarke, Dr. Williamson retiring. On September, 1882, the Register commenced to issue a small daily, devoted to the wants of Washington City. This is claimed to be the first regular daily paper ever issued in the county, its only possible competitor for this honor being a campaign sheet issued by M. J. Kelley and J. O. Young, from October 19 to November 8, 1870. It was not the intention to make the latter enterprise permanent. The Daily Register suspended after a brief season. The Register is Republican in politics, a seven column folio in form, and is edited and published by an energetic and practical firm of young men.

In the summer of 1872, J. B. Snider erected a hotel on the west side of the square. It was opened in September of that year, and is now known as the Commercial House, a popular resort for travelers. The building is 52x40 feet, two stories, and will accommodate some sixty guests. The property is valued at $6,000. G. W. Sharp, the present landlord, has been in possession nearly four years.

In July, 1872, the Money Order department was established at the post-office.

In 1876, R. E. Foote came from Wisconsin and opened the Central House. He has since made additions to his buildings and improvements in his property, so that it is considered the first-class hotel of Washington. Commercial men, especially, flock to it and him. The Central House has now thirty rooms, is 40x70 feet in dimensions, and the entire property is valued at $8,000. Mr. Foote purchased the original building of George Wilkes. In September, 1880, A. H. Foote assumed charge of the small but comfortable and homelike hotel, called the American House. He runs in connection with it a first-class livery stable. Besides these establishment, Washington possesses private boarding houses and several restaurants.

The Washington County Bank was organized in September, 1878. Its officers are the same as at the time of organization: A. W. Moore, president; F. A. Head, cashier; John W. Barley, assistant cashier. The capital of the bank, which transacts a general business, is $50,000, and its average deposits, $30,000.

The Washington State Bank was organized April 1, 1881. Capital, $50,000; average deposits, $100,000. A general banking business is transacted and special attention paid to collections. Its present officers (September, 1882) are: Edwin Knowles, president; Thomas Haak, vice-president; E. C. Knowles, cashier; O. L. Taylor assistant cashier.

The first bank in Washington was started by George W. Shriner, John J. Shriner and W. H. Collins, in July, 1874.

The new Opera House block, completed in 1882, is a credit to Washington and an evidence of its citizens' enterprise and confidence in the city's permanent prosperity. It is an imposing three-story brick structure, ornamented with galvanized iron cornices and fancy tower. The Opera House proper occupies the two upper stories, and is finished within neatly and tastefully, without being gaudily embellished. Dimensions, 52x90 feet; 24 feet ceiling; seating capacity, 900. Washington is an amusement-loving town, and hence the enterprise has been, and will be supported. The block was erected at a cost of $20,000 by a stock company, consisting of Thomas Haak, G. M. Parks, E. C. Pickard, J. G. Lowe, Frank Wolf, Robert Burns and J. B. Besack. Mr. Haak has been elected president; G. M. Parks, secretary; E. C. Knowles, treasurer. One side of the lower story of the block is occupied by the post-office, the other by a store. In connection with the amusement-loving nature of the Washingtonians, it must be stated that the young men of the city have organized a cornet band, which is obtaining more than a local reputation.

In the immediate vicinity of Washington are two flour mills. The old one is about a mile northeast of the city, and is run by Messrs. Welty and Johnson. They are not partners, the mill, which is a water-power, being used by each a portion of the time. It was erected by S. S. Penwell in 1869, and after passing through various hands, M. P. Welty, in 1878, purchased an interest of Mr. James. The mill has two run of burrs.

The Eureka Mills were erected in 1871–'72, by Messrs. Hallowell and Bowersox. The value of the property is about $15,000, the mills being now operated by Nathan Woodbury. They have two run of stone.

The first mill in the county was built, in 1865, on the south side of Mill Creek, just south of Washington. E. Woolbert erected it for A. Cubison. It has fallen to decay.

HANOVER CITY.

In the spring of 1869 Gerat H. Hollenberg laid out the town of Hanover, on Section 9, Township 2, Range 5. William Kalhoefer and August Jaedicke were the first to settle upon it. The town was named by Mr. Hollenberg in honor of his own native Hanover, and for the five years that he resided here previous to his death, it is not too much to say that he was at the head of all the best improvements of the village, and that he was most ably assisted by Messrs. Kalhoefer and Jaedicke. He abandoned his ranch, removed the post-office to the new town, and Mr. Jaedicke, the present incumbent, was appointed. In 1870 W. Wendell, Jr., started a blacksmith shop, his uncle having taken a homestead in the spring and returned East for him. The same year the Hanover House was built by H. Marguard, Charles Jockers started a brewery, Deviman & Smith a lumber-yard, and other noticeable improvements were made. The first term of school was also taught this year in the old building which had been erected the previous fall. John Turk was the teacher.

Hanover was incorporated as a city of the third-class July 5, 1872. Mr. Hollenberg died July 1, 1874, while on passage to visit his native city of Hanover. His will bequeathed $600 towards building a city-hall, provided the citizens of Hanover, Kan., would contribute an additional $1,000. This was done, and in 1875 the city hall was erected. A fire company was organized the same year. In 1872 Hanover was made the end of the first division of the St. Joe & Western Railroad, and a round-house and machine shops erected here. Under Mr. Kalhoefer's several administrations as Mayor the town has greatly prospered. It has eight general stores (Aug. Jaedicke occupying a handsome two-story brick building which cost $10,000), two hardware stores, three butcher shops, three harness shops, two drug stores, three livery stables, two boot and shoe stores, one jewelry store, one marble yard, one bakery, two restaurants, two hotels, one brewery, two furniture stores, one land office, one barber-shop, one elevator, two lumber-yards, two tailors, two grain buyers, one brick-yard, four blacksmith shops, and one paint shop. W. A. Gilson, proprietor of the Washington House, also runs the stage line and carries the mail between Washington and Hanover.

The Catholic Church was organized in 1870 by the Herman Brothers and others. The east half of the old church was then built. Occasional mass was said, but a resident priest did not come until 1874, when Father Weickman took charge. In July, 1876, Father John Pichler assumed control. Through his energy a schoolhouse and residence was built during this summer and fall. The school opened in November. In 1877 the old church was enlarged to twice its regular size, and the fine brick church now occupied was commenced. Because of financial incapacity the structure was not entirely completed until the fall of 1880, and then at a cost of $10,000. Upon October 3, 1880, the building was dedicated by Bishop Fink, of Leavenworth. A new schoolhouse, to cost $8,000, is now being built. Father Pichler's congregation is the strongest in the county, numbering about 250 families.

The Evangelical Association of North America in Hanover and at or in the vicinity of Washington was formed in 1870. Missionaries had been preaching for a year previous, but at that time Jacob Warner and wife, Jacob Gehring and Conrad Geothring, C. Berner P. E., and others organized the first class in Hanover. Rev. Messrs. Mortell, Troyer, P. Fricker, and Schesser had charge from 1870 to 1873. Mr. Fricker organized a second class in 1873 about eight miles southwest of Washington. A number of traveling missionaries succeeded Mr. Fricker in his work, and finally, in 1879, a church building was erected at Hanover. In 1880 Rev. D. R. Zellner was appointed to the mission, and a parsonage erected. In 1881 he was re-appointed.

The German Lutheran Church was organized in 1874 by Rev. Henry Roecer, William Kalhœfer, Aug. Jaedicke, Henry Brockmeyer, Fred Runger, Jacob Mosen, B. Wolfe, Henry and Fred Allerhielegen and others being among its first members. In 1875 a church edifice was commenced, and completed in 1882 at a cost of $1,500. Rev. Charles Hawes was the first pastor, Rev. J. G. Groenmiller the present. Membership about thirty.

The Methodists have a good society, erecting a brick church in 1880. Rev. J. N. McNulty, of Hollenberg, is their present pastor. The Baptists have an organization, worshiping in the Methodist Episcopal Church building.

Hanover has a population of nearly 700, and besides its business is blessed with a number of churches and societies and a weekly newspaper. The Democrat, established by A. B. Bowman, was the first paper published in Hanover. Its first number was issued November 7, 1871. In January, 1872, he removed it to Canon City, Col. Messrs. Baker & Moore started the Caucasian soon after, and in May, 1872, G. H. Hollenberg purchased it. The name was changed to Enterprise, and when P. D. Hartman purchased it in August, 1872, it became the Western Independent. In November, 1877, E. N. Emmons, who had purchased the paper, re-christened it the Sun. J. M. Hood came into possession in April, 1878, and named his purchase the Democrat. The paper is a neat six-column paper, is of home print, and is well patronized as a local and a county paper.

The new schoolhouse was built in 1878 at a cost of $3,000. It is attended by about 200 pupils. Principal, J. G. Binder.

The Hanover German Society was organized March 1, 1872, August Jaedicke, August Neugebauer, William Brandt, W. Wendell, Jr., and H. Marguard being charter members. In 1874 they partially built a hall, making an addition and completing it in 1881. It is of brick, and its substantial appearance is an index of the society's condition. About thirty regular members form the society.

The Masons in Hanover are represented by the Star Lodge No. 69, organized under dispensation, March 2, 1881, and granted a charter, February 15, 1882. The membership is about twenty. Present officers: W. J. Nevins, W. M.; D. Spence, S. W.; H. W. Heagy, J. W.; H. Marguard, Treas.; R. Wald, Sec'y; W. Jacobs, S. D.; Aug. Jaedicke, J. D.; D. Michelson, Tyler; H. O. Janicke, S. S.; H. Osendorf, J. S.

The Odd Fellows Lodge was organized in February, 1879, Aug. Jaedicke, Dr. W. Moll, W. Jacobs, Ch. Zabel being charter members. The present membership is about twenty—W. J. Nevins, N. G.; H. Ostendorf, V. G.; Jacob Straub, Sec.; Aug. Jaedicke, Treas.

CLIFTON.

In 1859 a town called Clifton was laid out in Clay County, just over the line. The company, composed of gentlemen from Manhattan and St George. passed the government of the "town" over to one James Fox, after they had built one log cabin. The next year Mr. Fox abandoned Clifton, Clay County, and started a new Clifton in Washington County, on the east side of Parson's Creek. He opened a store and blacksmith shop, and was appointed postmaster. In 1863 J. Haines, who had obtained possession of the site, moved the town back into Clay County. Clifton, Clay County, did not prosper, this time, either, and William Funnell bought out Mr. Haines and moved the town back into Washington County. A hotel was built by George Green, and there the growth of Old Clifton ceased forever. The present town was laid out by Rufus Berry in 1870. In 1871 Mr. Funnell moved his store and post-office to the new town. A. Green built a hotel and George Miller and Thomas Dolan started a general store. In December, 1877, came the railroad and the next year Hoenan & Barlow opened a hardware store, C. C. Funnell started a lumber-yard, the Pacific House was built, the school house erected, and Clifton commenced to assume its present promising appearance. Clifton, as it stands to-day, is a pleasant little village of about 600 inhabitants, situated twelve miles southwest of Palmer. It contains a number of churches and societies, a good newspaper and school, one flour mill, six general stores, one bank, two hotels, one hardware establishment, two drug stores, one furniture store, one lumber-yard and grain elevator, two agricultural implement stores, two millinery stores, etc., etc. The professions are represented by one lawyer, three physicians and three clergymen.

The flour mills, operated by Messrs. C. F. Scheppele and George H. Stegman, were built by these gentlemen in 1880. Since then the mills have been twice overhauled and re-fitted with new machinery, and they are now in prime order having a capacity of eighty barrels of flour daily. They have four run of stone and two rollers. The building is 36x56 feet, three stories and basement in height, and the entire property is valued at $17,000. The best brand of flour manufactured by this firm is "The Belle of the West. I. X. L."

The bank of Clifton was organized September 1, 1881, it being the successor of the private bank established by Snider Brothers three years before. A substantial two-story brick building was erected in the fall of 1881. This is the only banking institution in Clifton. Its capital is $20,000 and average deposits $15,000. The bank does a general banking and exchange business, its officers being: M. F. Southwick, president; E. W. Snider, vice-president; C. W. Snider, cashier.

The Clifton Review was establishhd February 27, 1879, by Willman & Blake. In May the paper passed into the possession of George Blake, and, in June, into the hands of C. H. Rice & Co. A. Dobbins & Co. purchased the establishment in October, and in April, 1880, N. S. Hewett, present editor and proprietor, assumed control. The Review is Republican in politics, printed at home, and a six-column folio in form. Mr. Hewett is a native of Ohio, residing in that State up to the breaking out of the war, when he came West and settled in Pawnee City, Neb. He served through the war, afterwards lived a number of years in Valley Falls, returned to his native State for a year, and in 1880 came to Clifton and purchased the Review.

The first hotel built in Clifton was the old "Parallel House" erected, in 1871, by George W. Lang. The name was afterwards changed to "The Atlantic House," and in 1879 J. A. Kern took charge. This hotel contains fifteen rooms, is 35x50 feet, and is valued at $2,000.

The Pacific House is a neat, well kept hotel, opened in the summer of 1878 and built by J. L. Miller. P. S. Carpenter, its present proprietor, bought the hotel in October, 1878. The Pacific House will accommodate about thirty guests, and the entire property is valued at $5,000.

The strongest religious denomination in Clifton is the Methodist. A church was organized in 1878, by Rev. J. H. Colt, and a parsonage built in July. In the summer of 1879, chiefly through the well-directed efforts of its pastor, Rev. W. J. Mitchell (P. E.), George Funnell, H. Rundle, G. D. Seaburry and S. H. Hamilton, the society erected a house of worship at a cost of $3,000. In March, 1880, Rev. J. C. Dana was called to the pastorate. He served one year and was succeeded, in March, 1881, by the present incumbent, Rev. J. R. Shultz. The society has a membership of 150.

The oldest church in the county is that organized by the Catholics, in the spring of 1866. J. Bowmaker, T. Kingsley, N. Eslinger and P. Eslinger are among the first members. A log schoolhouse was built the same year, about three miles north of Clifton, and here services were held until 1872, when the society erected a church building. Rev. Father John Loevenich, who assumed charge in the fall of 1882, is making arrangements to remove the church to Clifton, and it is the intention to build a church in the village.

The Baptists organized a society ten years ago, removed to Clifton in 1879, and built a church. Rev. A. J. Essex, their present pastor, assumed charge in the summer of 1882. The Presbyterian Church was organized in 1877, and numbers about thirty members. Rev. N. Meerken, the present incumbent, came in 1882. The Christians have a small society. Rev. John Boggs, pastor.

The district schoolhouse, built for the accommodation of both Clifton and Vining, is a large two-story wooden structure, erected in 1878. Bonds to the amount of $4,000 were voted. The pupils, numbering over 200, are divided into three departments. C. H. Rice, the principal of the school, has had charge since its organization.

As to social privileges, there are a number of secret and benevolent organizations. The Masons, Clifton Lodge, No. 122, was chartered February 15, 1882, and has already (September) about thirty members. C. C. Funnell is W. M.; C. W. Snyder, S. W.; A. J. Banner, J. W.; C. A. Elson, Treas.; F. O. Andrews, Sec.; W. C. Robb, S. D.; S. Long, J. D.

Sedgwick Post, No. 24, G. A. R., was chartered November 30, 1880. Present number of members (September, 1882), fifty-seven. Its officers are as follows: Post Commander, Joseph Pym; S. V., H. R. Sturdevant; J. V., Samuel Herley; Ajt., Calvin White; Surgeon, L. W. Lynde; Q. M., Ed. Short; O. D., B. F. Scott; O. G., G. W. Mowry; Sergt. Major, C. M. Woody; Q. M. Sergt., W. S. Bunton; Chaplain, W. T. Harris.

The A. O. U. W., Lodge No. 40, was organized April 17, 1880; has now nearly sixty members, and is officered as follows: W. D. Harmon, P. M.; A. C. Potter, M. W.; John Shea, F.; Jos. Greenleaf, O.; Wm. P. Funnell, R.; J. W. Chadwick, F.; C. C. Funnell, Rec.; Charles Service, G.; John Ross, J. W.; N. B. Needham, O. W.

Lodge No. 181, I. O. O. F., was organized October 12, 1881, and has now twenty-five members. Present officers (September, 1882): Geo. A. Huston, N. G.; D. C. Fraser, V. G.; N. B. Needham, Sec.; A. Roeneigh, Treas.

Clifton Temple, No. 20, U. O. A. T., is organized with F. H. Bennett as Templar, and H. S. Haynes, Recorder.

GREENLEAF.

This is a bright growing little division town on the Central Branch of the Missouri Pacific road. It already contains nearly 400 people, although located only about six years ago. The town was platted in November, 1876, and named in honor of A. W. Greenleaf, treasurer of the Union Pacific Company; proprietor, R. M. Pomeroy, of Boston. The railroad reached here in December. Prior to this, a small town named Round Grove, had been located about two miles south of the present site. Several buildings were erected and a post-office established. When the line reached Greenleaf, however, the post-office was removed to the new town and the old site abandoned. The postmaster of Round Grove, J. A. Simons, became the first postmaster of Greenleaf. He resigned in favor of W. K. McConnell, the present incumbent. A. A. Young opened the first store on the present site of Greenleaf, about the time the town was platted. On March 25, 1877, occurred an always important event—the birth of the first child, Ralph Greenleaf Snyder. In pursuance of previous arrangements, Mr. Greenleaf presented the parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Snyder, with a silver cup. They had opened the Greenleaf House but a short time previous, so that their accommodations were amply sufficient for the additional guest.

In the spring of 1877 the old schoolhouse, erected at Round Grove, was removed to Greenleaf, and Miss Sadie Hackey, first "manipulated" the young ideas. In 1880 a fine new structure was erected at a cost of $2,500, Prof. Charles Brown being principal, and Miss Hackey his assistant. The attendance varies from 90 to 110.

In 1878, while Greenleaf was the terminus of the Central Branch, a round-house was established at this point. But in 1880, when the road was extended to Cawker City, and Greenleaf was made the end of the first division, a new one was built. Some twenty men, including car repairers, are employed here, and as many again around the depot, dispatch office, etc.

Since 1880, Greenleaf has taken a new breath and a fresh start. The town was incorporated as a city of the third class, September 6, 1880. In the way of secret societies she has lately organized flourishing lodges of the A. O. U. W. and Knights of Pythias.

Of churches she has her share. The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1877, having completed a $4,000 building in the fall of 1882. Rev. J. W. Porter served the church for about four years, Rev. S. M. Hopkins being the present incumbent. In the spring of 1877, a Baptist Society was organized by Rev. J. T. Randen, who continued in charge until 1880, when Rev. Charles Clutz was called to the pastorate. The church has a membership of about thirty. In the winter of 1871, the French Catholics organized a society at the house of Sol. Lanoux. The organization is still maintained, with Father Molier, of Cloud County, as pastor. The old schoolhouse was purchased and transformed into a suitable place of worship. In the spring of 1880 the Presbyterians organized, but their society has died out and they are without any settled pastor. In May, 1882, the English Lutherans formed a flourishing church, and are now erecting a building—Rev. J. Schaurer, pastor. The Universalists organized in June, 1882, with Rev. Joseph Wilson as pastor.

The Greenleaf Journal was established by W. H. Besack, of Washington, January 15, 1881. In February he sold to H. A. Moore and J. A. W. Bliss. The paper was enlarged to an eight column folio. In May, 1882, Charles Barrett, its present editor and proprietor, purchased Mr. Moore's interest, and in August, that of Mr. Bliss. The Journal is independent in politics.

J. W. Bliss established the Independent, September 15, 1882. Its name indicates its policy. It is a seven column folio.

The business of Greenleaf is decidedly on the increase with her growth in educational, social and religious privileges. An important factor in this line is to be the Fair Association just formed (September, 1882), which is to hold an exhibition in November. It is also proposed to build a steam flour-mill. The business of the city is now represented as follows: Two hotels, five general stores, three hardware, two drug stores, one bakery, and four restaurants, two lumber-yards, two grain warehouses, and four agricultural implement depots, two blacksmith and wagon shops, two liveries, one bed-spring manufactory, one barber shop, etc., etc. Greenleaf has her two lawyers, her two physicians, and her two editors.

The oldest hotel is the Greenleaf House, built by A. Snyder in 1876. Soon after (1880) Greenleaf was made a division town; the railroad company erected a commodious hotel. It is maintained in fine style, W. W. Randall being proprietor. It is the Pomeroy House by name, being christened in honor of R. M. Pomeroy.

PALMER.

The village of Peach Creek was located in 1870, about two miles south of the present site of Palmer. In the spring of that year, E. Wilson, of Sherman Township, established a store, and a Methodist Episcopal class was soon after organized, Dr. Geo. Wigg being pastor. Dr. Randall came about the same time, opened a store, and was appointed postmaster. Others came in 1871. In the spring of 1879, however, those who had settled at Peach Creek, moved to the new village of Palmer, which had been laid out and named in honor of J. Palmer, one of the first superintendents of public instruction in the county. The town was platted in November, 1878, R. M. Pomeroy, E. A. Thomas and Eliza A. Currier, proprietors. Frank Nadeau started the first store on the site of Palmer in 1879, and his father, Francis, the present incumbent, was appointed the first postmaster.

Palmer is now a village of about 200 people, containing, besides the Methodist Episcopal Society, referred to, a French Catholic Church, organized in 1879 by Louis Ray and others. Father Molier was their pastor. They built a church the same year, and have now a society of some thirty. The present pastor is Father R. A. Hoffman. Rev. J. S. Horner is pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The village has a good district school.

The business of Palmer is represented by five general stores, an elevator, a lumber-yard, an agricultural implement depot, two blacksmith shops, and one hardware store. The traveling public are accommodated by two hotels—the Palmer House and the Central House. The latter was built by W. J. Cook in 1879, and is kept by Francis Nadeau, the postmaster. The Palmer House has just been opened.

HOLLENBERG.

This station situated on the St. Joe & Western Railroad, in the northeastern part of the county, was located in the spring of 1872, by G. H. Hollenberg, on his own land. He built a store on the town site, and when the railroad was extended from Hanover, C. A. Fuller built a store, and Jesse Elliott erected the Otoe House. In 1879 considerable building went on, and in 1881 J. Snider & Co. built a two-story stone building, opening a general store. In 1872 a post-office was established and R. T. Kerr appointed postmaster. J. Clapp is the present incumbent.

In 1872, C. Y. Van Deventer organized a Methodist Episcopal Society. Rev. J. N. McCurdy is the present pastor. Later the Baptists formed a society, but have no building.

In 1872 a small schoolhouse was built, Miss Reynolds teaching the first term in the fall of that year. She had but two pupils, the children of R. T. Kerr, and the only ones in town. Mr. Kerr kept a store in the first building erected by Mr. Hollenberg on the town site.

Hollenberg Lodge, No. 182, I. O. O. F., was organized June 16, 1881, by W. H. Johnson. C. C. Babcock is the present W. M. It has a membership of about thirty-two.

In 1881 the mill on the Little Blue, one mile south of town, was completed, at a cost of $8,000. It is now operated by S. F. Benson and A. G. Hobbs.

At present writing, Hollenberg is a village of over one hundred people, containing in the way of business two general stores, one hardware store, one drug store, two blacksmith shops, a grain warehouse and agricultural implement depot, one hotel and a boarding house. The Ohio House was opened in 1882.

HADDAM.

This post-office is situated about twelve miles west of Washington, off the line of railroad. The town was founded in 1869, when J. W. Taylor built a store upon land donated by Geo. Canfil. About this time A. Whitney opened a store on his claim, just west, and started a rival town of Haddam. The fight waxed hot for five years, Mr. Whitney being appointed postmaster at one time, and removing the office to West Haddam. In 1874, however, he sold out his store and removed to the rival and the present town. The post-office was removed, and W. H. Taylor built a hotel. Haddam, is quite a trading hamlet, having several stores, a lumber-yard, two blacksmith shops, and a wagon shop. It receives daily mails.

VINING.

This station, situated on the line between Washington and Clay counties, was laid out in the fall of 1877, by W. Haynes and Oliver Cooper, acting for the Junction City & Fort Kearney Railroad, which located a depot here. It was then called West Clifton. In the spring of 1881 the old Riverdale post-office was moved to town, and its name changed to Vining, in honor of E. P. Vining, general freight agent of the Union Pacific road. Vining contains a general store, a hardware store, a drug store, a hotel, a grain elevator, a lumber-yard, and an agricultural depot. The population, numbering about 200, depend, at present, upon East Clifton, for educational and religious privileges.

BARNES.

This is a small station of the Central Branch, containing about twenty-five people, situated near the head of North Coon Creek, a few miles east of Greenleaf. Elm Grove post-office was established in July, 1875, with J. R. Ober as postmaster. The post-office was removed to Barnes when the railroad reached that point in November, 1876. Henry Ober erected the first building on the town site and opened a store. The English Lutherans organized a church in August, 1879. They own a building, the Methodists worshiping in it every alternate Sunday. The only society at Barnes is the Maplewood Grange, organized in the fall of 1874. They erected a grain warehouse, in which the Congregationalists held services for a time in 1877-'78. Besides the elevator there are two general stores in the place and a boarding house.

SUMMIT (OR LINN).

The post-office of Linn was established in 1877, the name "Summit" being derived from the fact that when the railroad reached this point, it was found to be situated on the highest ground west of Atchison. William Cummins opened a store in January, 1881, and soon after F. Schwerdtfage laid out a town on Section 21, Township 4, Range 3, and built a two-story structure, which he occupied as a general store. Among the other early settlers were H. E. Billings, F. K. Fisk, Thomas Baker, John Mathews and Theo. Beckar. There is a small Methodist Episcopal Society at Linn, and a Masonic Lodge. The lodge was granted a dispensation April 20, 1882, and organized a week thereafter. The present membership is eighteen, with officers as follows: H. E. Billings, W. M.; G. R. Nunnemaker, S. W.; E. J. Gay, J. W.; M. Johnson, Treas.; G. R. Clark, Sec.; E. S. Newsum, S. D.; A. T. Riley, J. D.; D. Lyons, S. S.; A. B. Haworth, J. S.; N. Johnson, Tiler. A G. A. R. GRAHAM COUNTY.

GRAHAM County is situated three hundred miles west of the Missouri River. It is composed of twenty-five Congressional townships, each six miles square. The surface of the country is generally rolling, with small plateaus between the streams. The slopes are gradual toward the larger streams. The principal streams are the Solomon, running from west to east, and touching at the geographical center; Bow Creek, in the north from west to east, the entire width of the county; Happy Hollow, from northwest to southeast in south of county; Spring Creek from northwest to southeast to Solomon at the east line of county; Brush Creek, from southwest to northeast, enters into Solomon near center of county; and Sand Creek empties into Solomon one mile west of center of county.

The principal timbered stream is Bow Creek, consisting of oak, ash, box elder, cottonwood and elm; with occasional groves on Brush and Coon creeks.

Sandstone and lime for building are found in abundance along most of the streams. The stone is a white magnesian limestone, which upon first being taken from the quarry can be planed or sawed very easily, but hardens by exposure. The sand is of various kinds and qualities, suitable for any kind of mechanical work, and what is termed native lime is found in abundance, an excellent article for all indoor work, but will not stand the action of the elements, water dissolving it very readily. The soil is a dark loam, sometimes a little sandy, and well adapted for corn, wheat, rye, millet, and all kinds of vegetables. The natural grases are buffalo and blue stem. Tame grass is being put out, and does as well as in any other section of the country.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first settlement in Graham County was made May 18, 1872, by W. E. Ridgely, on the northeast section of the county, his nearest neighbor being at Logan, Kan., eight miles distant. From that date until the census was taken in November, 1876, there were but seventy-five inhabitants in the county, and in the spring of 1882, the census of the county was 3,328.

From the summer of 1879, until April 1, 1880, the county was attached to Rooks County as a municipal organization, and April 1, 1880, by a proclamation of Gov. John P. St. John, an organization was established with Millbrook as the county-seat, temporarily, and John P. Inlow, O. G. Nevins and A. E. Moses as Commissioners, and E. P. McCabe as County Clerk.

On June 1, 1880, the first election was held in the county, and the following officers were elected: Representative, J. L. Walton; Commissioners, A. Mort, G. W. Morehouse and J. N. Glover; County Clerk, John Deprad; County Attorney, J. R. McCowen; Register of Deeds, H. J. Harrvi; Treasurer, L.

Thoman; Surveyor, L. Pritchard; Sheriff, E. A. Moses; Coroner, Dr. Butterfield; Probate Judge, James Gordan. The first crops raised in the county were by Messrs. Ridgely, Wilkinson and Poole, in 1873, and consisted wholly of corn. The first post-office established was on Bow Creek, in 1874, at H. M. Wisdom's place, he being the postmaster.

The first Sabbath-school in the county was held at J. A. Holloway's place, May 10, 1874, Nett Spencer as Superintendent, and the first church society was organized by J. M. Brown, near the Houston post-office, July 30, 1876, as the First Presbyterian Church of Graham County. The first marriage in the county was between Paris Stevens and Miss Morrison, in the spring of 1874, by Judge Schurz, of Phillips County.

The first death was that of a daughter of A. Coleman, November, 1882, buried in Coleman cemetery, the first one organized in the county, April, 1879. The first school held in the county was in what was called Nevins District No. 45, in 1874, with Miss Anna Smith as teacher.

The first child born in the county was Thaddeus Beaumont. The first Notary Public was Osen G. Nevins, commission dated June 28, 1878. N. C. Terrell settled on Millbrook town site July 29 1878, and in the fall of the same year laid out the town of Millbrook—now composed of the following business houses: N. C. Terrell, general merchandise; W. A. Cox & Co., drugs; H. J. Fuller, drugs; C. Tillotson, general merchandise; Thomas Nesbitt, boots and shoes; J. N. Boyles, hotel; N. C. Terrell, postmaster. Samuel Stevens, blacksmith. In the fall of 1876, W. R. Hill located the town site of Hill City—John W. Ferrow, general merchandise. A. J. Wheeler settled August 17, 1878, on town site of Gettysburg, where now are the following business houses: Willis Ellsworth, hotel: Shearer Bros., boot and shoemakers; H. S. Hogue, livery stable; Sam Sharer, blacksmith; Willis Ellsworth, postmaster; H. S. Clubb, general merchandise; T. F. Goff, drugs and general merchandise. In July, 1878, G. E. Higinbotham settled where Roscoe now is, and in the fall of same year laid out the town of Roscoe—Samuel Coder, general merchandise; W. H. Hughes, blacksmith, and Higinbotham & Van Slyck, general merchandise, Barent Van Slyck, postmaster. Four miles southeast on Spring Creek, Higinbotham & Van Slyck have a flouring-mill, with two run of burrs. This is the only grist-mill in Graham County. Nicodemus was first settled July 30, 1877. the Town Company being W. H. Smith, President; Berry Clark, Vice-President; S. P. Roundtree, Secretary, and Jerry Alsup, Jeff Lindsey and William Edmonds, Trustees. It now contains W. Green's general store, and S. G. Wilson's store, Z. T. Fletcher, postmaster. The first newspaper published in the county was the Western Star at Hill City, May 15, 1879, Beaumont & McGill, editors. Later McGill was its publisher, and later still its editor; it expired June 17, 1880. The Millbrook Times came next on the list by B. F. Graves, July 11, 1879; Greenback in politics. It is still being issued. Next the Graham County Lever, August 2, 1879, H. S. Hogue, editor and proprietor; Republican in politics; discontinued December, 1881. Next in order is the Roscoe Tribune, May 12, 1880, Worcester & Kellogg, editors and publishers; discontinued. Then the Millbrook Herald, established January 3, 1882, by N. C. There are ten church organizations in the county: Presbyterian, 2; Methodist, 4; Baptist, 2; Campbellites, 1; Congregational, 1.

INDIAN TROUBLES.

The only Indian trouble in Graham County, since its first settlement, was during the summer of 1874. Mr. E. Poole, one of the first settlers on Bow Creek, was visited by three wild Sioux Indians (the only ones ever seen on Bow Creek), who walked into his cabin, and without any ceremony began to pick up such things as struck their fancy, whereupon Mr. Poole thought it time for Mr. "Lo" to go slow, and with a war whoop he knocked one of them into a heap in the corner, while the other two laughed at the fun. They left Mr. Poole in possession of his property, went farther down the creek, where they were met by some of the settlers armed, who ordered them to return West, which they did, and to the present time there has been no trouble in the county from Indians.

The second death by violence was on the 24th of October, 1882. Mitchell Hopson (colored) killed Theodore Rudman by shooting him with a Colt's pistol, one shot killing him instantly, the ball penetrating the heart. The difficulty arose from Mr. Rudman putting up some of Hopson's hogs. Hopson was arrested by Special Constable, tried before Justice Currie, and bound over to the next term of the District Court of Graham County, and confined in jail of Ellis County, Kan. On the 4th of December, 1882, while trying to make his escape from the officers at the jail, he was struck on the head with a hammer by one of the officers, from which he died the same day. The hammer, a large knife and quite a large package of red pepper were in possession of the prisoner, given him by outside friends to assist him in making his escape.

The population of Graham County, in March, 1882, was 3,328.

NORTON COUNTY.

NORTON County, lying in the northern tier, adjoining Nebraska, is the fourth county from the Colorado line on the west and the tenth from the eastern boundary-line of the State. Its climate and soil are similar to the neighboring counties of Phillips, Smith and Decatur. The soil has the same marvelous richness and capacity to resist drouth; there is the same scarcity of timber and absence of stone-coal, the same abundance of fine building-stone (magnesian limestone.) Like its neighboring counties, already named, Norton has numerous water-courses, the principal of which are the Solomon River, flowing east through the southern tier of townships, the Prairie Dog, through the central portion, and the Sappa, from southwest to northeast, through the northwest corner of the county. The Solomon has as tributaries, Cactus, Skull, Buck, Big Timber, Otter, Sand, East and West Elk creeks, and the Prairie Dog and Sappa both have numerous tributaries. Norton County's lands are divided as follows: Upland, 92 per cent; bottom land, 8 per cent; forest (government survey) 1 per cent; prairie, 99 per cent. Elm, willow and cottonwood timber may be found on the margins of the principal streams.

Early Settlements.—The first actual settler in what now constitutes Norton County was Shelby D. Reed, who came and settled in what is now Centre Township, in April, 1872. In the fall of the same year Thomas Beaumont, Henry Gordon and Peter Hanson settled in the southern section of the county, near the Solomon River. The last-named person (Peter Hanson), who now resides in the adjacent county, Phillips, opened the first farm in the spring of 1872, several months before he became an actual settler. The first families to make permanent settlement were James Hall and Daniel C. Coleman, who located on the Prairie Dog, twelve miles east of Norton. They came soon after Shelby Reed, in 1872. During the same season Joel Simmons, W. E. Case, Charles and John Beiber, G. N. Kingsbury, Henry Oliver, Sol. Marsh, Charles Hilsinger and Joel Mott settled in the county. Soon after came an individual called Col. N. H. Billings, who taking sway as a leader, became the first Representative in the Legislature on the organization of the county.

Organization.—August 22, 1872, the Governor issued a proclamation and declared Norton County organized for all purposes of government. He appointed as temporary officers, D. C. Coleman, County Clerk; J. W. Vance, S. D. Reed and James Hall, Commissioners. The county was divided into three townships, each ten miles wide and thirty miles long—to constitute the three Commissioners' Districts—named Almena, Centre and Solomon.

To perfect the county organization the first election was held September 24, 1872, which resulted in the choice of the following officers: Commissioners: Almena—J. W. Vance; Centre—Abram Louck; Solomon—Peter Hanson; Representative, N. H. Billings; Treasurer, H. Oliver; Clerk, D. C. Coleman; Attorney, N. H. Billings; Sheriff, James Hall; Superintendent of Schools, N. H. Billings; Register of Deeds, S. B. Newell. Less than fifty votes were cast. At the first meeting of the Legislature after the organization of the county, the name was changed to Billings, as a matter of sport, and to please the overweening vanity of the "honorable member" from the county, but the original name was preferred by the people interested and it was again assumed.

Norton was selected at the first election as the county-seat, but complaints of unfairness caused a second election to be held in 1874, when Norton again received a majority and still retains the court-house and other county buildings.

Indians.—When Norton County was organized, it was no uncommon sight to witness immense herds of buffaloes roaming over its beautiful plains, and as a consequence there were many visits from bands of Pawnee, Omaha, and other Indians, but no outbreaks occurred. In the winter of 1872, Edgar Page, whose dug-out was located on a bend of the Prairie Dog, was one day fixing up a bedstead when the blanket that served as a door was raised and in stepped an Indian, followed by several others. The little dug-out was crowded. The old Chief, his family and five of his tribe slept by the fire that night—it was very cold. In the morning they visited a ranch where dwelt a Mr. Shaw, and the men being absent, their presence caused consternation. One of the Indians came to the bed where Mrs. Shaw was lying with a four days old infant and said: "Good Indians; no hurt pretty white squaw," which, however, did not relieve her fears. They were part of a band of nine hundred Pawnees out on a hunt.

Educational.—On the first day of December, 1873, J. H. Simmons (now senior editor of the Norton Advance), commenced teaching the first school ever taught in the county. The school was held in a dug-out where the town of Norton now stands. There were sixteen pupils in attendance and the time was by no means wasted. It was a "pay" school, and like most others of the kind, the tuition promised was never paid. Mr. Simmons, however found a wife among his fair pupils, and of course that piece of good fortune compensated for his pecuniary loss.

In 1878, there were 24 organized school districts in the county, with a school population of 642. The average pay per month of male teachers was $22.55; females, $15.13. There were 11 schoolhouses in the county—10 log and 1 frame.

The following year, 1879, showed an increase of districts to 52; the school population was 1,623; teachers employed, 34; average pay of male teachers, $19.76; females, 13.07; the assessed valuation of school property was reported at $157,728.

In 1880, the returns show 84 districts; school population, 2,014; teachers employed, 62; the average pay of male teachers, $17.89; female, $14.80; the assessed valuation of school property, $324,922.72. The returns for the present year show the number of districts to be 92; the school population, 2,122; teachers employed, 71; males, 19 and females, 52; the average pay of male teachers, $17.50; females, $15.90. The schoolhouses, with very few exceptions, are built of sod. The public school building in Norton, however, is a notable exception. This is a large, two-story stone structure, erected at a cost of $3,800.

Agriculture.—There are nineteen postoffices, named as follows: Almena, Cactus, Clayton, Croco, Dallas, Densmore, Devizes, Edmond, Fair Haven,

The first births were Annie Beaumont, January 4, 1873, and Kate Kelly, March 3, 1873. The first natural death occurring in the county was that of Minnie Stiles, June 10, 1873. A few weeks previous to this date a man named Cross, supposed to be a horse thief, was shot on suspicion. The first post-offices were established at West Union and Port Landis, in January 1874. Alfred Coleman and John Landis were the first postmasters. The first store for the sale of general merchandise was established by Newell Bros., in Centre Township in 1873. In the fall of 1873 the first regular term of court was held by Judge A. J. Banty, in the fall of 1873. The temple of justice was a log house afterward used as a residence. A local historian states that "the roof was made of buffalo-skins. The term occupied some twenty minutes. Thomas Beaumont and Edward Hooverson were the two practicing attorneys. Representative Billings invited the bench and bar to take dinner at his house, and charged them twenty-five cents each."

Early Incidents.—The canvass of the votes for the location of the county-seat in 1872 was conducted on the following plan. It is averred that the election was held in an emigrant's covered wagon, and forty-two votes were cast, and that after the "formality" of the election was gone through with it was discovered that they had neglected to locate the county-seat. Whereupon, Representative Billings, then a central figure in local affairs, climbed out on the tongue of the wagon, and assuming the duties of chairman, exclaimed in stentorian tones: "All in favor of Norton for the county-seat, say aye." The vote was declared unanimous and the record made up accordingly. This may seem slightly irregular, but two years later this action was endorsed at a regular election.

In the year 1873, an old man named Chapman settled in the county, near the Solomon, built a neat cabin, and commenced improving his claim. It was known that he had quite a sum of gold, which he at times indiscretly displayed. He was found dead in his cabin, his head severely bruised, and a pistol ball in his heart. The money was taken from his pockets. The murderers were never discovered.

NORTON.

Norton, the largest town, and from the organization the county-seat of the county, is located within a mile or two of the geographical center of the county, near the bank of the Prairie Dog, on gently rolling ground. The town was projected in the summer of 1872, by D. C. Coleman, L. J. Crans, N. H. Billings and Samuel and Edward Newell. The design was to make it the county-seat, as the project for county organization was started about the same time. Coleman and the Newell Brothers began the erection of a frame store building. Logs were cut on the creek, sent to Kirwin, a distance of about fifty miles, by ox teams, where after a delay of ten days the logs were made into lumber. This was the first frame house built in the county. Newell Brothers put a stock of general merchandise in this building; the first store in the county. The following December the house was sold to J. S. Briggs, who immediately moved it to the site of a new town which was started one mile up the river, leaving the stock of the Newell Brothers on the prairie without shelter. They made a temporary shelter with poles, hay ricks and buffalo hides. The object of the sudden removal was to leave the "claim" without a building, as required by law, but to remedy this defect a log house, located six miles away, was purchased the following day, and removed to the old site. The roof of the new house was made of buffalo hides. Within a week or two a violent wind storm destroyed the frail tenement. The relics were gathered up and again put together and the house was used for a church. A clergyman named Wainright was the first to preach a sermon in the house—the first public religious services in the county. Elder Gibbs afterwards held forth to the early settlers in the same place. This building was also noted as the place where Judge A. J. Banty held the first term of court in Norton County. As soon as the town was declared the county-seat the Newell brothers erected another building, and leased it to the county for court and other purposes. During the summer of 1873, other business houses were erected, among others a drug-store was started by John Cooper. The Fourth of July, 1872, was celebrated in Norton in old-fashioned style. Thirty men and three ladies, Mrs. James Hall, Mrs. John Price and Mrs. D. C. Coleman. The ladies prepared a bountiful dinner, in which buffalo meat was served among other delicacies.

Like nearly every Western Kansas village Norton had its Town Company. The charter was dated September 8, 1873. The charter was to run twenty years; capital stock, $2,000; shares, $100 each. Of this corporation Richard Williams was President; George N. Kingsbury, Vice-President: J. H. Simmons, Secretary; W. E. Case, Treasurer; Alva Smith, John O'Brien and John De Mott acting with the President and Secretary as a Board of Directors. B. W. Rawlins, David C. Coleman, B. F. Williams, H. F. Brown, Phillip Brunner. David Close, John Diffenbach, E. Fisher, E. M. Newell, S. B. Newell, N. H. Billings and J. Stevenson were the original stockholders.

The first mails to Norton were brought by B. W. Rawlins from Republican City, and the post-office, kep tby N. H. Billings, was about one and a half mile from its present location. The service was paid for by the people, the Government generously furnishing mail-sacks.

In the fall of 1872, a rival town was started one mile further up the creek, called Norton Center. Mills, stores, shops, etc., were established, and for a time the village had a boom and seemed like a formidable rival of Norton, but within two or three years it collapsed, the best buildings were removed to Norton, and the scheme of building a large town at Norton Center collapsed. Nothing remains there but cellar holes and a few relics of the old mill.

The first building erected in Norton, after the organization of the Town Company, was a residence for W. E. Case. In the spring of 1874, Van Trump & Hallowell bought a stock of goods from Belleville, and opened in a house on the Square built by David Close. From the small beginnings of 1872 Norton has grown to be a bustling, thrifty trade center, with an intelligent, law-abiding population of five hundred persons. At present there are five general merchandise stores, two hotels, two milliner stores, two restaurants, five lawyers, two physicians, one harness shop, one furniture store, two livery stables, two blacksmiths, two newspapers, two billiard halls, two meat markets, one feed store, two hardware and farm implements, one lumber-yard, one barber shop, four church organizations, three church edifices, one bank, two drug stores, two shoeshops, two elevators.

Creamery.—The Norton Creamery, located one mile from town, was established in the spring of 1882 at a cost of nearly $2,000. There was at first a company, but it is now owned by three persons, Jesse Wright, J. B. Newell and John Graves. They manufacture 250 pounds of butter per day during the spring and summer months. The product of the creamery is mostly shipped to Denver. It is a good investment, and gives general satisfaction.

The first officers of Norton were: J. M. Price, Treasurer; W. H. Hopwood, Clerk; W. Louk, Trustee; Henry Oliver and S. Reed, Justices, M. Wood and A. Wrager, Constables.

The Norton County Bee was established by Harmon & Baker, in Norton, January 1, 1877. In November, of the same year, the office was removed to Leota, where it remained a few months, was then returned to Norton, and after issuing a few numbers there the publication was discontinued.

The Free Press was started at Norton, October 7, 1878, and the Locomotive at Leota, October 15, 1878; the first by Dr. A. A. Baker, and the last named by Nat. L. Baker. Both publications were short-lived.

The Norton County Advance was established at Norton, June, 1878. Pettigrew & Collins, publishers and proprietors. Their successors were Beckett, Beckett & Gowdy, and at present the paper is managed by J. H. Simmons and Hugh McCredie. The Advance has attained an excellent circulation, and is conducted with ability. The Advance is Republican in politics.

The Norton People, a seven column folio, Republican in politics, was established by its present editor and proprietor, Hugh T. Carlisle, July 15, 1880. The paper has made its way, and enjoys a good circulation and fair advertising patronage; present publishers, Carlisle & McCredie; two papers have been consolidated under the name of the People.

Norton Lodge, No. 157, I. O. O. F., was organized April 12, 1879. Charter members: R. Rowley, David Reagan, John Wallace, Julian DeJean, A. G. Chambers, A. F. Harmer, W. E. Case, David Keagan. Present officers: W. E. Case, N. G.; J. H. Simmons, V. G.; A. Hepler, Treasurer; J. R. C. Stettler, Secretary. Norton Lodge has a membership of thirty, and holds its meetings in Odd Fellows Hall every Saturday evening.

Norton Lodge, No. 199, A., F. & A. M.: organized in August, 1880. First W. M., Albert Graves. Present officers: Albert Graves, W. M.; W. R. Cannon, S. W.; John Randolph, J. W.; J. King, Treasurer; Samuel Means, Secretary; Frank Lockard, Senior Deacon; J. W. Vining, Junior Deacon; Samuel Will, Tiler. Regular meetings on the first Wednesday of each month, in Masonic Hall. There are thirty-five members attached to the lodge.

Norton Cornet Band was organized in May, 1882, with the following members: E. M. Turner, Leader; Calvin Newell, Sol. Marsh, B. V. Wheeler; Charles Darling, A. Curry, Phillip Blue, Ed. F. Jones, Hall Harmason, A. N. Clawson, L. H. Thompson, Secretary.

Public School.—Norton may not only be proud of her elegant school building, but of her efficient teachers. The schools of the town were started nearly ten years since by J. H. Simmons, an excellent educator and a gentleman of culture and refinement. The school building, built of magnesian limestone, is a large two-story edifice, located in a commanding, position in the south part of town. The cost of the structure was $3,500 and the building was finished in the winter of 1881. Two teachers are at present employed, E. Borin, principal, and Annie Means, assistant.

LENORA.

This thriving town, located at the western terminus of the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad, located on the Solomon in the southern part of the county, was named in honor of Mrs. Lenora Hauser, was first settled in 1873, but it was not until the last few years, the prospect and finishing of the railroad, has it made much progress. The first settler in the village was R. C. Sadoris. A. Hendricks and George W. Hood came to the place soon afterward. The first town officers were G. W. Hood, Trustee; W. Griffin, Treasurer; A. Hendricks and A. Bowman, Justices, and George E. Dubois and Eph. Burris, Constables. The first school in the village proper was taught three years since, by Mrs. Alice Pugh, in the south part of town. Rev. Mr. Graham preached the first sermon, in the schoolhouse, in 1879. A post-office called Lenora was established in 1875, with R. C. Sadoris as postmaster. C. Lathrop built the first grist-mill in 1879. It is located on the Solomon, near the village. The first store was opened by A. Hendricks in October, 1875, near what is now the center of the town. Lenora is located on a rolling prairie. The town contains three general merchandise stores, one hardware, one drug, two hotels, one restaurant, one blacksmith, one wagon-maker, two shoemakers, two livery stables, three physicians, one barber shop, one billiard hall, one lumber-yard, one meat market, one lawyer, one flour store, one newspaper office. Population, 125.

The Leader, a five-column folio, started in Lenora, as a Greenback organ, by Garretson & Topliff, March 16, 1882. August 17, 1882, the office was purchased by J. B. Wright, who made improvements in the appearance of the paper. With the advent of Mr. Wright The Leader became Republican in politics. It devotes considerable space to local affairs.

Edmond, a thriving village on the Central Branch Railroad, is located in the famous Solomon Valley, four miles from the south line of the county-seat. It is sixteen miles from the county-seat. The town contains an excellent flouring-mill, famed for good work. It is an excellent trading point for a considerable part of Graham and Norton counties.

BOURBON COUNTY.

LOCATION AND NATURAL FEATURES.

BOURBON County borders on Missouri, and is in the third tier of counties from the Indian Territory. The northern boundary of the county is three miles north of the 38th parallel of north latitude. It is bounded as follows: On the north by Linn County; on the east by Missouri; on the south by Crawford County, and on the west by Neosho and Allen Counties. By the "Bogus Laws," its limits were defined as follows: Beginning at the southeast corner of Linn County, thence south thirty miles; thence west twenty-four miles; thence north thirty miles; thence east twenty-four miles to the place of beginning. Within these limits were contained 720 square miles or 460,800 acres.

On February 3, 1867, an act was approved which fixed the boundaries as follows: "Beginning at the southeast corner of Linn County; thence south on the east line of the State of Kansas to the southeast corner of Section 24, Township 27, Range 25; thence west to the southwest corner of Section 23, Township 27, Range 21; thence north to the southwest corner of Linn County; thence east to the place of beginning." By this act the extent of the county from north to south was decreased to twenty-five miles, and increased from east to west to about twenty-five and a quarter miles north of the fifth parallel and to about twenty-five and three-quarters south of said parallel, and the area reduced to about 406,000 acres.

The county was named Bourbon, after Bourbon County, Ky. This latter county was organized, with eight others, in 1785, by the Virginia Legislature, before Kentucky became a State, and named in honor of the Bourbon family of France, a prince of which family was at that time on the throne, and who had rendered valuable aid in men and money to the American colonies in their struggle for independence.

The general surface of the county is undulating, the highest hills being situated in the northwest part and being about 200 feet above the level of the Marmaton. The bottom lands average about one mile in width, and comprise seventeen per cent of the area of the county, the upland comprising eighty-three per cent. The native forests comprise ten per cent of the area; open prairie ninety per cent. The timber belts average one-half mile in width, and contain, as principal varieties, hackberry, hickory, oak, pecan and walnut. But little attention has as yet been paid to forestry, but the disposition to plant trees is being manifested. The varieties planted are the ash, catalpa, cottonwood, elm, hickory, hard and soft maple, poplar, walnut and willow, all of which do well. Bourbon is also an excellent county for the different varieties of grasses. The soil is deep and fertile, and is underlaid by limestone and sandstone at various depths all over the county. Fire clay abounds and pottery clay is occasionally found, also hydraulic cement, yellow ocher and other mineral paints, which however exist only in limited quantities. An extensive quarry of fine flagging stone is found about five miles west of Fort Scott. This stone exists in layers from two to five inches in thickness, is known as the Fort Scott stone, and is shipped in all directions and as far eastward as St. Louis. Two qualities of bituminous coal are found, a red quality and a black or gas coal. The most of the county is probably underlaid at depths varying from one to fifty feet, and in veins from one to five feet in thickness. One and a half miles up the Marmaton from Fort Scott is a natural gas well from which escapes about 2,000 cubic feet of gas per day. The well was bored in 1870, and a company formed with the view of supplying Fort Scott with gas from this well, but in reaming out the well, the reamer was broken in the well either by accident or design, and the larger portion of the flow cut off.

The principal streams are the little Osage and the Marmaton. The former flows from west to east near the northern boundary of the county, and has numerous small tributaries from either side, the main one being Limestone Creek, in the northwestern part of the county, flowing northeasterly. The Marmaton flows from west to east through the central portions of the county, and has also numerous tributaries—the main ones from the north being Turkey and Mill Creeks, and from the south Yellow Paint Creek. Pawnee Creek is a tributary of Yellow Paint and flows north. Dry Wood Creek is in the southeastern part of the county, flows eastward, and has as branches Walnut and Richland Creeks. Numerous springs are found and good well water at a depth of from ten to forty feet.

EARLY HISTORY.

In the year 1837, a plan for the defense of the Western frontier was proposed by Charles Gratiot, and published by the Secretary of War. Fort Scott was recommended as a military post. In 1842, Capt. Benjamin Moore of the First Dragoons, and Dr. Mott, Assistant Surgeon U. S. A. were appointed a commission to select a military post to guard Missouri and the frontier, against the depredations of the Osage Indians. This commission was ordered West by Gen. Zachariah Taylor, from Fort Wayne, I. T., under escort of Lieut. John Hamilton and nineteen men, leaving there April 1, 1842.

They at first selected a suitable place at the mouth of Shoal Creek, on Spring River, fifty-five miles south of Fort Scott. The proprietor of the land, John Rogers, a Cherokee Indian—asked $4,000 for the site selected; but the officers had been instructed not to pay over $1,000, hence the Rogers' site had to be abandoned. Proceeding northwestward, they at length arrived at the Marmaton, in Missouri, and camped near the farm of Col. Douglas. The next morning in company with Col. Douglas and Squire Redfield, they visited the present site of Fort Scott. Being satisfied with the location, and the land belonging to the Government, they decided to locate there. Lieut John Hamilton with his party was left in charge, and immediately proceeded to erect temporary quarters for his command. This was on the 9th of April, 1842. These temporary quarters consisted of a one-story log building, daubed with mud, and without a floor. Capt. Moore returned on the 10th of June, with two companies of the First Dragoons, assumed and held command until the arrival of Maj. William M. Graham, who arrived with two companies of the Sixth United States Infantry, when the latter took command, with Capt. Swords for Quartermaster, Rev. Mr. Clarkson, Chaplain, and John A. Bugg, sutler. Mr. Bugg was also Postmaster, and so remained until 1849, when he was succeeded by Col. H. T. Wilson. Within a year from the establishment of the post, its name was changed from Camp Scott to Fort Scott. The first mill in the county was erected by the Government, on Mill Creek, about two and a half miles west of Fort Scott. The lumber for the construction of the Government buildings was sawed at this mill. These buildings when completed were said to be the finest quarters in the army. They were erected at a cost of upward of $200,000. There was no other military post anywhere near Fort Scott. Fort Gibson was 160 miles southwest, on the Arkansas, and Fort Leavenworth on the Missouri, 140 miles north.

Col. H. T. Wilson who had been in the sutler's department at Fort Gibson for nine years, came to Fort Scott in September, 1843. He purchased of John A. Bugg an interest in the sutlership, and in 1849 purchased the remaining interest and became Postmaster as well as post sutler. Col. Wilson was the first white civilian settler in the county, and still lives in Fort Scott, an honored citizen.

No military reserve was secured here by the Government, hence when a few years later it was decided by the authorities at Washington to abandon the post, the buildings were offered for sale "without land." In 1853, all the movable property was sold, and in May, 1855, the buildings were advertised for sale. When Maj. Howe came down with his auctioneer to sell the buildings, Col. Wilson, by permission, read a protest to the sale; claiming the land upon which the buildings stood, as a preemption; but despite the protest the sale proceeded. But as there were only a few persons who desired to buy such large buildings without the land, there were very few bidders, and but a small amount was realized from the sale. The improvements that had cost upward of $200,000, sold for less than $5,000. Col. Wilson bought the large, double, two story house, in which he still resides, for $300, selling one-half of it immediately for $150. During the residence of the military, but little was done toward building up a town, and but little military service was required of the soldiers. Social pleasures, trading with the Indians, fishing in the Marmaton and its branches, and hunting turkey and deer comprised the round of duties and daily life from 1842 until 1854.

In this latter year, the Territory of Kansas was organized, and settlers began to enter what is now Bourbon County. Among the earliest of these, whose names are now ascertainable, were the following: In 1854, Nathan L. Arnett, in Marmaton Township, and Gideon Terrell, William and Philander Moore, in Pawnee Township; in 1855, Guy Hinton, in Walnut; Cowan Mitchell, James Guthrie, John and Robert Wells, and David T. Ralston, in Marion; in 1856, John Van Syckle, Samuel Stephenson and Charles Anderson, in Franklin; D. D. Roberts and Joseph Ray, in Freedom; H. R. Kelso, A. Ward and Col. Bullock, in Scott; Ephraim Kepley, the Stewarts, Bowers and Halls, in Mill Creek; Gabriel Endicott, David Claypool and others in Drywood. David Endicott assisted the Government in the survey of the neutral lands, and Edward Jones, one of the earliest settlers in Marmaton Township, built the first saw mill in the county, except the one built by the Government, already mentioned. Mr. Jones' mill was erected in 1856, on the Marmaton, near the present site of Marmaton Village. At first it was only a saw mill, but later a grist mill was attached. In Timber Hill Township, the earliest settlers were T. K. and T. B. Julian, father and son, June 4, 1854; F. D. Myrick, in November, 1854; and M. E. Hudson, in 1855.

The first marriage in Mill Creek Township was that of William R. Morgan to Miss Elizabeth Bollinger, June 15, 1856; in Marmaton Township, C. F. Rucker to Miss Ellen M. Chambers, October 16, 1856. The first birth in Marmaton Township was that of Henry C. Painter, March 15, 1855.

BORDER TROUBLES.

After the invasion of March, 1855, by Missourians, to participate in the election of the 30th, Bourbon County enjoyed comparative peace until July, 1856. At that election, there were about three hundred armed men at the Fort Scott precinct from Missouri, who cast most of the votes that were cast for Joseph C. Anderson and S. A. Williams on that day. At the time, there were probably not more than thirty legal voters in the precinct.

In the early spring of 1856, a party of about thirty men from South Carolina came to Bourbon County under a leader named George W. Jones, all under the auspices of the Southern Emigrant Aid Society, and in furtherance of the scheme of making Kansas a Slave State. Upon their first appearance in the county, their manners were mild and conduct that of gentlemen. They visited most of the Free-State settlers, made inquiries as to where they came from, what their views were upon the pending issues of the day, how they were off for arms and ammunition, and what kind of land there was in this part of the Territory; and informed them that they were looking for a good location for a colony from South Carolina. Some of the Free-State men were themselves from South Carolina, as was the case with Josiah Stewart, who had settled in what is now Mill Creek Township in 1855; and without suspecting the final ends these pretended forerunners of a colony had in view, gave them full information not only as to the country itself, but as to their own political opinions and means of defense. It thus became easy to make a complete list of the leading Free-State men, with full particulars regarding them, which was done; and then commencing in July, and continuing on through the fall, those on the list were taken prisoners, taken to Fort Scott, and, in some cases, while thus held, advised by some "friend" among their captors, that, if they had any regard for their personal safety, it would be best to "skip out" and leave the Territory. In this and other ways nearly all the Free-State men were driven out during the year, and a Pro-slavery man put upon each Free-State man's claim.

Besides these operations, there was but one other important historic event that occurred during the year. That was the arrival at Fort Scott from Texas of a party of "Rangers," in August, who, in company with a like number of citizens of Fort Scott, under command of Capt. William Barnes, formed themselves into a company of upward of one hundred, all under the command of the Texas leader, and marched north toward Osawatomie, for the purpose of having "some fun." When camped on Middle Creek, in Linn County, about eight miles south of Osawatomie, they were attacked by Capts. Anderson, Shore and Cline, and most ingloriously defeated. (See history of Linn County.)

This battle of Middle Creek, although not very important in itself, has an interesting sequel. The parties engaged in it on the Pro-slavery side, who were not taken prisoners, made the best time possible—some to Missouri, others to Fort Scott, imagining themselves closely and hotly pursued the whole distance, by the "Abolitionists."

"Those who took to their heels arrived home about midnight, yelling: 'The Free-State men are upon us; the Free-State men are upon us; the buildings will be burned;' etc. The surprise was so sudden that resistance on the part of those who had remained at home would have proved of little account, and their only salvation was to save what they could and make the best of it. A party consisting of five or six families, with Col. H. T. Wilson as pilot, started for Mr. Brantley's residence about one-half mile from the Fort. They found Mr. Brantley's family in bed fast asleep, but when awakened by the voice of Col. Wilson, asking for shelter, Mr. B. concluded that something of unusual importance was on foot, and so jumped up and opened the door, when a general inpouring took place, and the room was soon filled with frightened women and crying children. Confusion was no name for it. Mr. Brantley's sons were at the Fort, but when the Free-State men were announced, hastened home to alarm the household and to prepare for fight. They reached home shortly after the arrival of the Colonel's party, and brought the report that everything was being destroyed, and that this was their next point of attack. What was to be done? Destruction and death stared them in the face. One of the ladies suggested a season of prayer. A circle was formed, and Mr. Brantley, who was a very devoted Baptist, commenced to pray. We will leave them on their knees, and return to the Fort, and see what became of the other people. Mrs. Dr. Hill, who resided in the East Block, was in the act of retiring, when the news reached her that the Free-State men were going to burn the buildings. Her husband and son were away at the time, with the horses, and what to do she hardly knew. She called together the remaining portion of her household, informed them what was up, and after offering prayer, told them to take care of themselves as best they could. She then ordered her servants to bring her carriage around to the front door, and, seating herself in it, ordered the negroes to draw her away to some secluded spot. In the rear of her house was a deep ravine, and an almost impassable road, even in daylight, wended its way to the bottom. Down this road they went "a-flying" regardless of expenses, and not until they had reached the thick underbrush, did they stop for further orders. After remaining here for some time she involuntarily clasped her hands to her head, and discovered that in her haste she had forgotten to take her "night cap" off. The first impression that entered her mind after the discovery, was that the "cap" (being white) would attract the attention of the "Abolitionists," and they would shoot at it, so she took it off and put it in her pocket. She remained in the buggy all night, her servants acting as her body guard. The next morning the wanderers returned. We are unable to learn whether it was the prayer offered up at Mr. Brantley's that kept the Free-State men from making a raid into the place, or whether Mrs. Hill was drawn back home, but we do know that when Col. Wilson and wife returned, Mrs. Hill rushed over, and told Mrs. Wilson and several other ladies that had assembled at the Colonel's residence, of her exploits.

"After this scare, it was thought best by those having families here to send them away. George W. Jones, who hailed from South Carolina, took an active part in this movement. He owned a large wagon (Noah's Ark, No. 2), with a capacity too numerous to mention. He 'took in' all the women and children in the country that he could hear of, who had no other means at their command, and started for the States, drawn by four yoke of oxen." (This quotation is from a history of Fort Scott by C. Rollin Camp.)

In 1857, the Free-State men, driven from their homes the year before, began to return. A considerable number of new settlers entered the county this year, so that with increased strength they acquired increased confidence in their ability to maintain their rights. As a preliminary step to the regaining possession of their stolen stock and claims they organized themselves into a "wide awake" society, in opposition to the "dark lantern lodge" of the Pro-slavery men. Among the leaders of the "wide awakes," were such men as J. C. Burnett, Capt. Samuel Stevenson, Capt. Bain, Josiah Stewart and Benjamin Rice. This organization of "wide awakes" was accustomed to meet at different settlers' cabins at different times, as a precaution against surprise and attack by their "dark lantern" neighbors. When everything was in readiness, the Pro-slavery usurpers were notified that they must relinquish the claims they had wrongfully seized. The greater part now realizing the fact that resistance on their part would result certainly in defeat, and possibly in bloodshed, left the appropriated claims on receipt of the notice, but others, more tenacious of their "rights," had to be driven out by force of arms. As an illustration of these difficulties, the case of Stone against Southwood will suffice. Southwood was a preacher of the Methodist Church South, who had taken possession of Mr. Stone's claim and cabin. Upon Mr. Stone's return he endeavored to assert his rights, but the Rev. Southwood refused to vacate. The Free-State men thereupon built Stone a cabin near the one occupied by Southwood, into which Stone moved his family to await the opening of the land office. Soon a difficulty arose about a well of water, which led to an assault by Mrs. Southwood upon Mrs. Stone. This assault led the Free-State men to order the Rev. Southwood's family off the premises by a certain fixed time. On the day before this order was to be carried into effect, the Rev. Southwood's Pro-slavery friends, to the number of about 200 armed men, prepared to move Mr. Stone off the claim. The Free-State men thereupon collected in Mr. Stone's cabin and awaited the attack of the Rev. Southwood's friends. The attack was made at night but failed, the attacking party retiring to Fort Scott, threatening to return with increased numbers, and to hang every Free-State man found on the premises. The Free-State men then increased their number to sixty, and awaited the second threatened attack, which was made according to promise, but which resulted in failure as had the first. As the result of the whole movement, Rev. Southwood left the premises before his time expired and Mr. Stone was reinstated.

Similar difficulties were of frequent occurrence, and it is certain that the Free-State men did not in every instance have the law and the right upon their side, as a six months' abandonment of a claim worked a forfeiture of legal title to it under the pre-emption laws. At any rate they were frequently arrested on various kinds of charges, and harassed in every conceivable way. The District Court was presided over by Judge Joseph Williams. Claim questions were for a time referred to his court for decision, but the Judge being a Pro-slavery man very generally decided in favor of the Pro-slavery claimant, and the Free-State men indicted for the most part for imaginary offenses, were either required to give excessive bail, or refused bail altogether. The Free-State men were of course universally dissatisfied with such a state of things, and Montgomery determined if practicable to bring Judge Williams to his senses. To this end he arrested a certain Pro-slavery man, kept him in custody long enough, and treated him severely enough to make him think when released that he had been in great peril and was exceedingly fortunate in being released at all; incidentally mentioning in his hearing his own intention of marching to Fort Scott and forcibly releasing the prisoners held and refused bail. Montgomery's Pro-slavery prisoner, upon being set at liberty, immediately set out for Fort Scott, and lost no time in informing Judge Williams of Montgomery's programme; whereupon the Judge suddenly discovered that to refuse bail to prisoners under such circumstances was a thing unheard of in law and in itself absurd. The prisoners were at once released without bail, and upon their own recognizance.

On account of the dissatisfaction of the Free-State men with the decisions of Judge Williams' court, they organized a court of their own, calling it the "Squatters' Court." Dr. Gilpatrick, of Anderson County, was made Judge, and Henry Kilbourn, Sheriff. The proceedings of this court were regular and dignified, its decisions impartial and just, and rigidly executed, by its most efficient Sheriff.

The proceedings of this squatter's court were as distasteful to the Pro-slavery men, as were those of Judge Williams to the Free-State men, and in consequence, on the 12th of December, 1857, an expedition was organized, and started out under the command of Deputy United States Marshal Little, of Fort Scott, to capture the court. This attempt was a failure, and on the 16th of the month Marshal Little organized a posse of about fifty men, for a second attempt. As Little approached the "fort," Capt. Bain's house, in which the "court" was sitting, he was met by an embassy from the "court," consisting of D. B. Jackson, Maj. Abbott and Gen. Blunt. This embassy had been sent out, as Marshal Little was advancing, under a flag of truce. At the close of the parley that ensued, Marshal Little informed the embassy that if the "court" did not surrender in thirty minutes he "would blow them all to hell." Thereupon the embassy returned to the "fort," which the "court" promptly placed in condition of defense by removing the chinking from between the logs for port holes. Those who had shotguns remained inside, while those who had rifles stationed themselves near the "fort" behind trees. Maj. Abbott then warned Little that if he advanced beyond a certain line he would be fired upon. Little advanced, notwithstanding, and received a volley from Maj. Abbott's rifles and muskets. The Marshal's men returned the volley, and then wheeling beat as precipitate a retreat as possible to the distance of one-half a mile. Here they halted and learned that four of their number had received slight flesh wounds, and that B. F. Brantley's horse had been shot through the neck. Little re-formed his line, and asked all who were willing to make a second attack upon the "fort" to step aside with him. Ten men responded, and Little at their head made a second advance, with the same result as before, except that this time none of his men were wounded. None of the Free-State men were wounded in either charge. Finding it impracticable to take "Fort Bain," the Marshal led his posse back to Fort Scott. On the following day, as Marshal Little was approaching "Fort Bain," with forces increased to about 150 men, he was informed by William Hinton, "that his birds had flown." This upon reaching the fort he found to be true, the court having retired during the night to the Baptist Church at Danford's Mill. Here their numbers were increased to about 300. On the following Sunday they returned to "Fort Bain," and held a "jollification" over the victory of the previous Tuesday. They then returned to the Baptist Church, disbanded and went to their homes.

Prominent among the members of this "Squatter's Court" were Capt. Bain, Col. Phillips, P. B. Plumb, Gen. Lane and Maj. Abbott, who was military commander. One of Marshal Little's posse, James Rhoades, who was at the time engineer at Ed. Jones' saw mill, after returning to Fort Scott, started back to the mill, up the Marmaton. On the road he met a Mr. Weaver, a Free-State man, with whom he engaged in a controversy. Weaver was unarmed, Rhoades had a gun he had in some way obtained possession of which belonged to a Free-State man in Linn County, and besides being armed he was under the influence of intoxicants. He attempted to shoot Weaver, but Weaver seized the gun, wrenched it from his grasp, and shot him through the head, killing him instantly. He was buried on the 20th, with Masonic ceremonies. Weaver retained possession of the gun, and thereby came near getting himself into serious difficulty. It had an individuality of its own, and was well known to many Free-State men of Linn County, and when it was discovered by some of them in Weaver's possession, he was at once adjudged a Pro-slavery man, and had to prove himself innocent before his personal safety was re-assured.

About this time began what may be called the Denton difficulty. In the year 1856, a Pro-slavery man named Hardwicke settled on the Little Osage, and later in the same year, Isaac and James Denton, father and son, and also Pro-slavery men, came to Bourbon County from the South. Hardwicke permitted James Denton to settle on a claim of his, upon the condition that in the spring he should look up a claim for himself. When the time arrived for Denton to vacate the claim, he refused to do so, and referred his case to the "Squatter Court," which sustained him. Hardwicke's cabin was fired into, and himself and family forced to leave the claim; but he himself lurked around the country for some months. About the last of March, 1858, Isaac Denton and Hedrick were shot and killed. Davis' house was fired into and he wounded in the hand. Hardwicke and some of his friends were suspected of the crime and fled the country. He was subsequently arrested in Missouri, placed in irons and delivered to John Denton, another son of Isaac's, to be brought to Kansas for trial; but on the way Denton shot Hardwicke dead. Denton in his turn was shot and killed October 25, 1860, at the State Line Grocery, near Barnesville, by William Marchbanks in retaliation for the killing of Hardwicke.

Toward the close of the year 1857, Montgomery's band, on account of their operations on the Little Osage, became known as the "Osages," and the pro-slavery element, as the "Pro-slaveries." The people of Fort Scott during this time were constantly subject to alarms, by reports that the "Osages" were coming to attack the place. The Fort Scott people were composed of three classes of persons—Free-State, Pro-slavery and Border Ruffians of the worst class. Among the latter were such men as George W. Clarke, W. B. Brockett and the Hamiltons. Against these men the "Osages" entertained an undying hatred, and it was because they were harbored in the city against the wishes of the Free-State and other peace-loving citizens that these annoyances and alarms were of such frequent occurrence. The Free-State men in the city did most of the guard duty, and from the peculiarity of their position were almost constantly between two fires; or at least they had to serve as a kind of bulwark, over which the "Osages" from without had to fire, or through which they had to break, in order to reach the Border Ruffians within.

On account of these constant alarms, a public meeting was held in Fort Scott, Sunday, December 18. Gov. E. Ransom was Chairman, J. Kennedy Williams, Secretary. A committee on resolutions was appointed, consisting of Charles P. Bullock, H. T. Wilson, George W. Clarke, D. F. Greenwood, Dr. Hill, S. A. Williams, J. W. Head, John H. Little, J. Cummings, William Gallaher, Mr. Harlan and B. F. Brantley. Gov. Ransom was afterward added to the committee. At an adjourned meeting held in the afternoon, the following resolutions were reported and adopted:

> Resolved, That the Sheriff and Deputy Marshal be requested to make affidavits to the facts touching the matter now under consideration, and that the same be conveyed by express, accompanied by a communication to the Governor of the Territory for military aid.
> Resolved, That a committee be appointed, consisting of five persons, to be denominated a "Committee of Vigilance," under whose authority and directions a military organization shall be had, with a view to aid when necessary the civil authorities in the execution of warrants, and any other legal process, and in the due execution of the laws; and it shall be the further duty of the committee to organize a night patrol for the security of our town, its citizens and their property."

The Vigilance Committee appointed consisted of H. T. Wilson, B. Little, T. B. Arnett, George A. Crawford and J. W. Head.

The following resolution, offered by George W. Clarke, was also adopted:

> Resolved, That we recommend to the good citizens of the Territory to abstain from all retaliatory acts, and not to allow themselves to be drawn into illegal combinations or conduct by the acts of lawless men, but in all cases to maintain their rights under and by the laws of the land.

To His Excellency F. P. Stanton, Acting Governor of Kansas Territory:

Sir: As Sheriff of Bourbon County, I feel it my duty to report to you that, in consequence of an organized and armed resistance to the civil authorities by a body of armed men in this county aided and assisted by men equally lawless, I am unable to serve processes, make arrests, or otherwise perform my official duties; and I have the honor to ask that you have a body of United States troops sent to this point to aid me in enforcing the laws, and to give quiet to the disturbed state of things in this region. Herewith I send my affidavit and the concurrent statement of Marshal Little.

John S. Cummings,
Sheriff of Bourbon County.

In response to this appeal, Secretary Stanton sent Companies E and F, First United States Cavalry, to Fort Scott, under command of Capt. Sturgis, they arriving there December 21. Their presence had the effect to restore and maintain quiet for several weeks. But on January 10 the troops were removed to Fort Leavenworth, and it was not long before the old troubles broke out afresh, and guard duty was resumed. At that time, "Old Ganter," as he was called, a German, was living on Mill Creek, on a claim which he had bought in that part of the county. One night in February, 1858, he came into Fort Scott, and reported the enemy in his neighborhood, saying, he "vish der tam Abolitionists get frost bite mit der feet!" "Old Ganter" was somewhat of a character. He owned a slave, of whom he took good care, and obliged his wife to do all the heavy work. At one time he was asked by Ed Jones if he thought it was right to drive the Free-State men off their claims as was then being done by Pro-slavery men. His reply was, "Oh, vell! By tam, der vill pe so many less to vote." But when his time came to be driven out by the Free-State men, with characteristic inconsistency, he sought the protection of the very men of whose expulsion he had previously so emphatically approved. Ganter was afterward shot and killed by bushwhackers during the war.

At the time the forerunners, under George W. Jones, of the South Carolina "colony," were making their selection of claims, Josiah Stewart was advised by Jones as a "friend" to leave the Territory. Mr. Stewart acted on this advice. In 1857, he returned and took possession of his claim. In June, 1860, Nathaniel Boylston returned from Texas to Kansas through Missouri. In passing through Fort Scott, some of his Pro-slavery friends told him they knew of a good claim they wanted occupied by a good Pro-slavery man, and, acting on the advice of a lawyer, Boylston moved onto the claim then belonging to and occupied by Mr. Stewart. The next morning, which was Sunday, Mr. S. heard some one chopping in the timber, and, with one of his boys, went out to learn who it was and why. Upon approaching Mr. B., whom he did not know, he inquired of him why he was there, and what he proposed to do. Mr. B. replied, "You will see in time. I propose to pre-empt this claim." Mr. Stewart thereupon sent his son back to the house after a shot gun and revolver, and upon their arrival went down to Mr. Boylston, who had his ox-team and wagon and family with him, and some other man also for a witness to the fact of his having made his "improvement" on the claim. As Mr. Stewart came near the party, and demanded of Mr. B. what he meant by attempting to pre-empt a claim already taken by himself, Mr. Boylston stepped from the opposite side to the rear of the wagon, brought his gun to his shoulder, and attempted to fire on Mr. Stewart; but the gun failed to go off. Stewart then raised his gun and fired upon Boylston, wounding him so that he died in about thirty days. Stewart gave himself up to await the result of the shooting. Upon the preliminary trial, the doctors testified that the wounds were not necessarily mortal. In the following fall, the grand jury failed to find an indictment against Mr. Stewart, and he was therefore never brought to trial. Mrs. Boylston contested Mr. Stewart's claim, but did not succeed in securing it.

On the night of the 10th of February, 1858, scouts reported that the "Osages" were coming to the city, and were certain there was now no mistake about it. Montgomery had been appealed to for assistance by a Mr. Johnson, who had suffered from the Border Ruffians of the city. He at once set out at the head of about forty men, to execute writs which had been procured against the offenders. He was met by a deputation of citizens at the outskirts of the town. Of this deputation he demanded the persons for whom writs were held, and received the reply that they should be surrendered upon condition of being tried in Fort Scott, but that otherwise they would not be surrendered without a fight. Montgomery promptly decided to fight, and put his command in motion for the town, preceded by the more rapid movements of the deputation, among the members of which were Judge Williams and George A. Crawford. All the leading Pro-slavery men suddenly discovered that important business interests in Missouri demanded their immediate attention, and when Montgomery arrived, the birds he sought were flown. The hospitalities of the city were extended to, and accepted by, the "Osages," after which they quietly took their departure.

On the 15th, the runaways returned, and a serious difficulty arose at the Fort Scott Hotel, on account of an attack by W. B. Brockett on Charles Dimon. Mr. Campbell, proprietor of the hotel, was, however, equal to the emergency, and by his determined bravery, prevented bloodshed. On this same day two companies of the First United States Cavalry were ordered to Fort Scott, to report to Judge Williams or Deputy Marshal John H. Little. They arrived on the 26th, under command of Capt. George T. Anderson and Lieut. Ned. Ingraham. Montgomery always desired to avoid a conflict with United States troops, and now as Fort Scott was defended by them, he operated against the Pro-slavery men in the country, with the object of driving them into the city. Many families, some say as many as three hundred, were thus broken up and ruined. Capt. Anderson could afford them no security at their isolated homes, and the only recourse was to flock to the city, which they did. During these raids, much property and many horses were stolen. John Brown had a fine horse, which belonged to Mr. Poyner, and Montgomery had one belonging to J. J. Farley, which he offered, some time afterward, to permit Judge Wright to ride home to its owner; but on account of the horse being "too wild," the Judge declined. During these raids, on the 28th of February, a party of Montgomery's men, under command of Rev. John E. Stewart, alias Levi W. Plumb, approached the house of Van Zumalt, a Pro slavery man living on the Little Osage, and in attempting to enter it shot and badly wounded him. He, however, recovered and left the Territory.

After the killing of Denton and Hedrick, Travis was arrested and tried for complicity in the murder. He was a harmless old man, about sixty years of age, and without marked political proclivities. The "squatter court" before which he was tried found him "not guilty." On his way home he stopped at Wasson's, where, on April 1, he was shot and killed, some say by James Denton and others of Montgomery's men.

On the 21st of April, Montgomery, with a small party of his men, were in the valley of the Marmaton. Word was brought to Capt. Anderson that a party of "Osages" were up the valley robbing and plundering. Capt. Anderson immediately started in pursuit. On his way, he passed Jones' saw-mill, where a meeting of Free-State men was being presided over by John Hamilton. Anderson invited Hamilton to accompany him in pursuit of Montgomery, but he was "too busy" just at that time to leave. Anderson soon came in sight of Montgomery, who, upon discovering the presence of United States troops, retreated at full speed up Paint Creek, closely pursued. Arriving at a narrow defile, Montgomery dismounted his men and assumed the defensive. Capt. Anderson's troops were fired upon as they approached, one of their number mortally wounded, Capt. Anderson's horse killed, and the troops defeated. An armistice followed, to remove the Captain from under his fallen horse, and the "Osages" beat a timely retreat, having but one of their number slightly wounded. The wounded soldier, Alvin Satterwaite, a young man of good family, and exemplary habits, died on the 23d and was buried on the 24th, with military honors.

It is impossible to imagine, much less to appreciate and describe, the bitterness of feeling which existed in the hearts of the two classes of the people that then inhabited the Territory against each other. Insult and wrong provoke retaliation, and the retaliators seldom cease when they have merely dealt out justice. Revenge continues to spur them on, and it is natural to desire to put the enemy hors du combat, so that he shall no longer be dangerous or a disturber of the peace. It was in some such spirit as this that a portion of Montgomery's men, calling themselves "the committee of safety," met the next day after the encounter with the troops and passed the following resolutions, believing as they did that the Pro-slavery residents of Fort Scott had instigated the attack upon them by the troops:

WHEREAS, A body of Government soldiers and border ruffians did, on the 21st inst. fire upon some Free-State citizens, who were peacefully and inoffensively traveling on the common highway, and being incited to commit said outrageous and unlawful act by other ruffians living in Fort Scott;

Resolved, 1. That Judge Joseph Williams, the corrupt tool of slavocracy, be required to leave this Territory in six days; after that period he remains at the peril of his life.

2. That Dr. Blake Little, J. C. Sims and W. T. Campbell, the traitors who were elected by fraud and corruption to the bogus Legislature, be required to leave within six days—an infraction of this order at their peril.

3. That H. T. Wilson, G. P. Hamilton and D. F. Greenwood, the infamous swindlers of the Lecompton Convention, who forged an infamous constitution, be hung to death if they are caught in this Territory ten days from date.

4. That E. Ransom and G. W. Clarke, the holders of the two "wings" of the pretended National Democracy and the corrupt fuglemen of a corrupt President, have six days to leave this Territory, under penalty of death.

5. That J. H. Little, James Jones, Brockett, B. McDonald, A. Campbell, Harlan and the ruffians who accompanied the soldiers to assist and witness the massacre of Free-State citizens, be sentenced to death.

6. That Kennedy Williams and D. Sullivan, who stole by legal forms horses of Free-State men, be sentenced to whipping and branding and then be driven from the Territory.

7. That after the departure of the Judge and Marshal, no other official officers shall be allowed to administer the law but those elected under the Free-State constitution.

8. That Judge Griffith, Maj. Montgomery and Capt. Hamilton be directed to carry out the orders of this meeting.

9. That Capt. Anderson shall be hanged to the highest tree in Bourbon County, and every soldier put to death wherever he may be found.

10. That a copy of this notice be served on the people of Fort Scott.

No effort seems to have been made to carry out these resolutions.

As early as March of this year, a feud developed itself in the Fort Scott Town Company. George W. Clarke was continually concocting some scheme to its injury, and on several occasions in Trustee meetings an angry debate occurred, in which George W. Clarke and George A. Crawford were the principal opposing disputants. On the 27th of April the feud came to a head. Dr. G. P. Hamilton and Brockett notified by letter George A. Crawford, Charley Dimon and William Gallaher to leave town within twenty-four hours, under penalty of being shot on sight.

It was now plain that Crawford & Co. or Hamilton & Co. must go. Crawford & Co. decided to stay, let the consequences be what they might. It was not long before the new state of affairs was generally understood, and a force of about twenty-five well-armed men collected to prevent the execution of the Brockett-Hamilton programme. On account of the killing of young Satterwaite the week previous, it was feared the soldiers would take sides with Hamilton's crowd, but investigation proved that only three had been induced to do so. J. H. Little and B. F. Brantley arrayed themselves on the side of Mr. Crawford, as did also Capt. Anderson and all of his soldiers except these three. Next morning, when they were found to be missing, a Sergeant with a guard was detailed to find them. The Sergeant proceeded to the Western Hotel, where he found Brockett and demanded of him the deserters. Brockett at first flatly refused to surrender them, but the Sergeant, who with his men was well armed, told Brockett he should have the deserters, even if he had to tear down the hotel to get them. Brockett yielded, the men were taken to camp, given their breakfast, and ordered by their comrades to leave town within one hour, under penalty of death. This order they promptly obeyed. The original parties to the feud remained mutually besieged until next day, when Brockett, Hamilton and most of the other border ruffians left Fort Scott for good, and were not again heard of there until after the Marais des Cygnes massacre, in which they played the leading part.

The next event of importance was the arrival of troops under command of Major, subsequently Maj. Gen. Sedgwick. This was May 6, the troops consisting of one company of dragoons, one of heavy artillery and a section of T. W. Sherman's battery. On the 17th all the troops, except the heavy artillery and battery, left for Fort Leavenworth, those remaining being in command of Lieut. Shinn. Soon reports of the Marais des Cygnes massacre were circulated throughout the country, and of retaliatory robberies by Montgomery's men. All was excitement and false alarms for a number of days, until on the 29th of May, Deputy U. S. Marshal Samuel Walker, of Douglas County, reached Raysville on his way to Fort Scott with writs for the arrest of Montgomery and others of his men. He had been sent down by Gov. Denver, who feared that bloodshed would result from the terrible state of excitement in Southeastern Kansas, and who thought it could be prevented by the arrest of a few of the Free-State leaders. Gov. Denver had offered Marshal Walker all the troops he might need for the execution of the writs, but the Marshal knowing that Montgomery would not arrest him if he went alone, and that if he went with a body of troops, Montgomery could not be found, he reached Raysville accompanied only by Maj. Williams. Upon his arrival there he found assembled about 200 men, who were being addressed by Montgomery in favor of going to and burning Fort Scott. A Mr. Oakly, who was the only one of the crowd that knew the Marshal, asked him why he was there, to which he replied, "To arrest Montgomery." Mr. Oakly advised him not to attempt it, as it could not be done. Montgomery in his address told his friends that a Deputy U. S. Marshal was coming down to arrest him, that the authorities would arrest Free-State men, but that they would not arrest Pro-slavery men, and advised the expedition to Fort Scott, which finally was the decision of the meeting. After the speaking concluded, Marshal Walker arose to address the meeting. He informed them that he was a U. S. Marshal, and that if they would get out warrants for

Clarke and others who were believed to have been participants in the Marais des Cygnes Massacre, and furnish him with a posse he would go to Fort Scott and arrest them. The reply to this proposition was that the Judges would not issue the warrants. The Marshal then told them to get warrants from a Justice of the Peace, and that, although he, as a U. S. Marshal, had no right to serve a writ issued by a Justice of the Peace, yet in this case he would do it. So armed with his writs for the arrest of George W. Clarke and others, and escorted by a posse of seventy-five mounted men with Montgomery in command, the Marshal entered Fort Scott on Sunday morning May 30. Among the first in Fort Scott to discover the Marshal's presence was George W. Clarke. He seized his Sharpe's rifle, ran in his shirt sleeves and with face exceedingly pale to the hotel and gave the alarm, and then ran to his house. The Marshal soon arrested a few that he wanted and proceeded to Clarke's house. Clarke closed his house and refused to surrender. Montgomery drew his men up in line in front of the house, Clarke's friends to the number of 300 quickly assembled and drew themselves up in line on the sidewalk in front of Montgomery, and not ten feet distant, every revolver and rifle on both sides on the cock. The Marshal seized a tongue belonging to a Government wagon, and was on the point of breaking down the door when Clarke put his head out of an upper window and said that if any one would assure him that Marshal Walker was in command of the posse he would surrender. Mr. Oakly assured him of that fact, and in a moment Clarke opened the door and came out, his wife on one arm and daughter on the other and a carbine in his hand. He asked to see the Marshal's writ, which the Marshal refused to show, knowing that Clarke would refuse to surrender to him on such authority. Walker drew his pistol on Clarke, told Maj. Williams to hold his watch and count two minutes, and then told Clarke that if during the two minutes he did not surrender, he should fire upon him, whereupon Clarke dropped his carbine and gave up.

Immediately upon Clarke's surrender, Capt. Campbell, a Deputy United States Marshal, of Fort Scott, came forward with a warrant for the arrest of Montgomery, and said to Marshal Walker, "Montgomery is in command of your posse, here is a warrant for him, now arrest him!" Walker replied, "Arrest him yourself; if I had a warrant for him I would arrest him."

As soon as Montgomery heard Campbell speak, he ordered his men to "shoulder arms," "about face," and "double quick for their horses," leaving Marshal Walker and Maj. Williams alone with their prisoners. Matters now became pretty warm for the Marshal. He was in a tight place, in a "bad fix," and in order to get out of it he persuaded Marshal Campbell to furnish him with a horse that he might pursue and arrest Montgomery. Upon overtaking Montgomery, he induced him to surrender, and took him back to Fort Scott, when all the people turned out to see the unusual sight of Montgomery a prisoner.

Marshal Walker then turned Clarke and his other prisoners over to Capt. Lyon, who was stationed there and was present when the arrest was made, on condition that Capt. Lyon should send them the next day to Lecompton for trial, and himself started for Lecompton with his prisoner, Montgomery. The next day, upon arriving at Raysville, he was overtaken by a courier from Capt. Lyon, bearing a dispatch stating that he had just released Clarke and the other prisoners on a writ of habeas corpus. This news vexed Marshal Walker so much that he promptly released Montgomery and told him "to stay and fight it out," and when he was through to report to Lecompton, all of which Montgomery promised to do.

Upon the authority of Capt. Lyon, it may be stated that had not Clarke surrendered, and had he been shot by Marshal Walker, as he undoubtedly would have been, Walker himself would have been immediately riddled by more than one hundred bullets.

On the morning of June 7, an attempt was made by some of Montgomery's men to burn the Western Hotel, Fort Scott, by piling a quantity of hay against it and igniting it, and a number of shots were fired into town from the southwest. No one was hurt, and the fire was extinguished before any harm was done. Capt. Nathaniel Lyon was stationed in the city on the 10th, for the purpose of protecting the place. On the 13th, Gov. Denver arrived, and on the 14th a public meeting was held with a view of arriving at a basis of peace. Speeches were made by Govs. Denver, Robinson and Ransom, Judges Wright and Griffith, and B. F. Brantley. Gov. Ransom, at the request of Gov. Denver, made a speech expressing his views as to the cause of the troubles, and as to the course the Territorial Government should pursue. He said that Montgomery, Jennison, Brown, and their men were guilty of robbery and murder, and should be brought to trial and punished. Judge Wright opposed Gov. Ransom's sentiments and plan; feeling ran high, and serious difficulty for a time was feared. But by the judicious and firm course of Gov. Denver, peace was restored, and the meeting adjourned until next day.

The adjourned meeting was held at Raysville, of which Gov. Denver assumed control. He made a brief address to the assembled settlers, during which he said in substance that his purpose in visiting Southern Kansas, was to assist in removing difficulties then existing; that he should treat actual settlers without regard to past differences; that he believed both parties had been to blame; that his mission was to secure peace, and as a basis for an agreement, proposed the following conditions:

1. The withdrawal of the troops from Fort Scott.
2. The election of new officers in Bourbon County by the citizens thereof, without regard to party lines.
3. The stationing of troops along the Missouri frontier to guard against invasion from that State.
4. The suspension of the execution of old writs until their legitimacy could be properly authenticated.
5. The abandonment of the field by Montgomery and his men and all other bodies of armed men, on both sides.

As soon as the Governor had concluded his address, numerous calls were made for Montgomery. His appearance had the effect to reduce the assembly to breathless silence. The most intense interest was manifested in what he had to say, as he was universally recognized as the leading spirit of the party with whom the Governor was making a compromise. Montgomery said in substance, that he accepted the terms the Governor had proposed, and thanked him for the spirit of justice by which he appeared to be actuated; that justice, which for so long had been a stranger to the Free-State party, was what of all things it most desired; that he should, with the sincerest pleasure, return to his home; and that when the Governor redeemed the pledges he had that day made, he would disband the three hundred men that followed his banner and his fortunes and retire to his cabin-home, there to remain.

Tranquillity was thus restored and both parties seemed to strive for some months to preserve the peace. Under date of June 25, Capt. Lyon wrote to Gov. Denver, that the agreement up to that time was fully observed; and on August 5, Gov. Denver wrote that the troops are no longer needed at Fort Scott. But notwithstanding this quietude the embers of turmoil were not extinguished, only temporarily smothered and liable to burst forth into flame at any moment on the least provocation. The Pro-slavery men and many who were Free-State men were much dissatisfied with Gov. Denver for making a compromise with Montgomery, believing with Gov. Ransom that he and his "banditti" ought to be brought to punishment; and a difference of opinion developed as to what were in fact the terms of the compromise. Montgomery's men claimed that although it was not so stated in the treaty, yet it was the distinct understanding that no arrests should be made for any offenses committed prior to June 15, the day upon which the compromise was effected, that "by-gones should be by-gones," and that all would do their best to preserve the peace. The Pro-slavery party claimed on the other hand that the compromise did not mean that there should be entire immunity from punishment for all crimes committed prior to June 15, but only that private individuals should refrain from inflicting punishment according to their own code and pleasure; and that it was an article of that compromise that all such offenses should be referred to the Grand Juries of the proper counties; that that compromise only pledged immunity from punishment for political offenses; that it could not and did not condone crimes against the law. Thus the Denver compromise left room for wide differences of opinion, disputes and difficulties. What the Free-State men and Jayhawkers called a "by-gone" the Pro-Slavery men and sometimes officers of the law did not call a "by-gone." What the former called a "political offense," the latter called a "crime against the law."

In the meantime, however, George W. Clarke, who had been so long in the land office at Fort Scott, who was one of the worst, if not the worst of the evil geniuses of the border, and for whom there are even now few, if any, to speak well, had been got rid of, to the great joy of all the citizens. In August, the President had appointed him to the position of Purser in the Navy, and he left Fort Scott under an escort, which conducted him safely into Southwestern Missouri.

The following extract from a letter written by a Pro-slavery man November 10, 1858, shows the general estimate in which George W. Clarke was held:

> I suppose the Governor (Denver) forgot to name George W. Clarke, a pet in the land office at Fort Scott, who was the real cause of all the troubles in that region, and that a company of Dragoons had to be stationed there to protect him from the merited vengeance of an outraged people. He forgot to say that this Government "pet" had, in the summer of 1856, plundered, robbed and burned out of house and home nearly every Free-state family in Linn County, while his hands were steeped in innocent blood, and the light of burning buildings marked his course. This being the case, was it any wonder that the country arose in a flame of indignation, and clamored for revenge against the soulless wretch placed in their midst, and rewarded for his brutality?
> I am no friend to Montgomery, nor to those who sustain him, for he caused many civil and unoffending families to abandon their homes. Had he, after having raised his forces, marched to Fort Scott, demanded the surrender of the murderer Clarke,* and then strung him up to the nearest tree, and gone home to his business, he would have deserved the gratitude of his country. But he showed himself a desperado and a plunderer, and his gang played a stronger game for their pockets than they did for the safety and security of the people.

It is not easy to state with certainty which party first broke the truce, but on the 16th of November, Ben Rice was arrested on a number of indictments by Charles Bull, Sheriff of Bourbon County; and on the same day, or about the same time, the houses of Poyner and Lemons, a short distance north of Fort Scott, were robbed by some of Montgomery's men. One of the indictments against Rice was for the murder of Travis, who had been shot February 28. Montgomery regarded this as a violation of the treaty of June 15, looking upon the act as a political offense, or "by-gone," while the other side regarded it as a crime against the law. Then followed a couple of weeks of horse-stealing, robbing and threats of personal violence, which led to a second meeting at Raysville, held December 1, with the view of again restoring peace. Of this meeting, W. R. Griffith was President, J. C. Burnett and Rev. M. Brockman, Vice Presidents, and J. E. Jones, Secretary. The compromise of June 15 was discussed, and a new set of resolutions reported and adopted. A resolution that all offenses committed prior to June 15 last, be referred to the Grand Juries of the proper counties, was lost by a vote of 64 to 109. A motion was then made by Rev. M. Brockman, but subsequently withdrawn, "that we now go to Fort Scott and release Benjamin Rice." At this meeting, Montgomery made the statement that by finding indictments against Rice and others, the compromise had been broken. This brought out a letter from Judge Wright denying the truth of the statement, but saying that if all the Pro-slavery men were of the stamp of Dr. Little and son, neither Montgomery nor Brown would then be in the field "driven almost, if not entirely, to be maniacs." Ex-Gov. Denver also wrote a letter dated December 19, denying that Montgomery's was the true interpretation of the treaty of June 15. He wrote: "In that agreement it was never intended to compromise the laws of the Territory, by debarring the Grand Juries from the proper discharge of their duty. The agreement was substantially this: That for past offenses no arrests should be made, except upon indictment found by the Grand Juries."

*It is now conceded that Clarke was innocent of the murder of Barber—time has shown that he, in common with many others, was accused falsely in those troublous times.

But on this question it was impossible for the two parties to agree, and the release of Rice was fully determined upon by Montgomery. Accordingly, on the 15th of December, he organized a rescuing party of nearly 100 men, Old John Brown being one of the party. John Brown, however, did not enter Fort Scott with Montgomery, for the reason that the two differed as to what should be done with the city upon entering it. Brown was in favor of its complete destruction, or, as Montgomery afterward said to parties still living: "If Brown had been in command of the party instead of myself, not one stone of Fort Scott would have been left upon another." Montgomery's main object was to release Rice. He therefore proceeded with his men without Brown, leaving him at what was called the "Wimset farm," about three miles from Fort Scott up the Marmaton, and entering the city about daylight. Upon approaching the house in which Rice was held prisoner, one of the large double houses built by the Government, then called the "Free-State Hotel," and kept by Col. William T. Campbell, now occupied as a residence by Judge Margrave, Montgomery divided his command into three divisions of twenty each. One of these divisions passed quietly around to the right of the hotel, another as quietly to the left, while the third division entered the house by the front door, which had been left unlocked for the convenience of George A. Crawford, who, upon Little's invitation, slept with him that night in the store. Thus the hotel fell an easy prey to the mob. This third division went up stairs into the third story, or attic, where they found Rice chained to the floor. A chopping axe was soon brought up, and with it the chain which was around Rice's leg was severed, and thus the prisoner released.

While this was going on a tragedy was being enacted just across the alley from the hotel. Here was the building or store in which Little and George A. Crawford had passed the night. The front end of this store faces southwest, and the side is next the alley toward the southeast. At both front and side is a door over which there is a transom. In this store Little and George A. Crawford were sleeping. The noise made by the rescuing party awoke them, and Little opening the front door fired upon the party with his shot gun, which he had used the day before in hunting ducks. The duck-shot with which the gun was loaded lodged in the heavy overcoat worn by J. H. Kagi, doing but little injury to Mr. Kagi. Immediately after firing his gun, Little closed the front door and locked it, went to the side door, placed a dry goods box against it, and mounted the box to look out through the transom to see what was going on. The transom window being covered with dust, he proceeded to clean it with a handkerchief so that he might see out. The movement of the handkerchief was noticed by Montgomery's men in the alley, one of whom raised his Sharpe's rifle and fired at the handkerchief, not being able to see Little, but hitting him almost precisely in the center of the forehead, from which shot he of course instantly fell to the floor, and expired in about an hour. The cannon was immediately brought to bear upon the store, and a demand made for its surrender. This demand was not complied with. But an entrance to the store was effected through the back door, which was opened by Dr. Blake Little to admit Miss Louisa Conway. Montgomery's men then robbed the store of about $7,000 worth of goods, consisting mostly of dry goods, but quite a number of ladies' saddles were taken.

Alexander McDonald, then living in the house now owned by Gen. C. W. Blair, opened his door, and stepped out upon the porch. Upon refusing to surrender, he was promptly fired upon by C. R. Jennison, the bullet passing through the door. Mr. McDonald immediately retreated into the house unharmed. From twelve to fifteen of the citizens of Fort Scott were made prisoners, among them Col. and Mrs. H. T. Wilson. It was the design of Montgomery's men to burn Col. Wilson's store, but Montgomery, discovering, as he thought in Mrs. Wilson a resemblance to Dr. Hogan, who had at a certain time befriended him, and upon learning from her that she and the doctor were brother and sister, gave the order that the store should not to burned, upon the condition, however, that the Colonel should furnish breakfast for fifty of his men. The Colonel ordered the breakfast at the "Western," or Pro-slavery" hotel; but not a mouthful of it was tasted for fear of poison.

Little was buried next day in the west part of town, and subsequently removed to Evergreen Cemetery. The following resolution, passed with others on the day of his burial, shows the estimation in which he was held by his brother Masons: "That our brother living, was an ornament to society, a worthy representative of the genial spirit and kindly virtues of our order, and in every sense a noble, generous, brave and upright man."

After the occurrence of this affair, the citizens of Fort Scott made application to Gov. Medary for protection. The Governor having no troops to send, advised the organization of home militia to act as a Marshal's posse in arresting criminals and enforcing law. The first company was organized December 24, with John Hamilton, Captain; C. F. Drake, First Lieutenant, and E. W. Finch, Second Lieutenant. Two other companies were organized. Of one of these, Alexander McDonald was Captain, A. R. Allison First Lieutenant, and W. C. Dennison, Second Lieutenant. Of the other, J. G. Parks was Captain, and Hugh Glen and E. W. Black, Lieutenants. Daily drilling continued for some time, the ranks of the companies being readily filled by a promise of pay at the rate of $3 a day. The promise was never redeemed. Gov. Medary having made a requisition on the Government for a quantity of smooth bore muskets, said muskets were forwarded to Sedalia, Mo., the end of the Pacific Railroad, in January, 1858, whence they were taken to Paris, Linn County. On January 30, a party of fifty Bourbon County Militia started on a four days' trip to procure the new arms. Upon their return, preparations were at once made to make a raid in pursuit of "Jayhawkers," and after a three days' scout all along the Little Osage, about a dozen prisoners were brought to Fort Scott. After a needed rest of a few days, a guard started for Lawrence with the prisoners for trial, camping near Black Jack on the night of the 14th. Next morning at the Wakarusa, they were met by the news of the passage of the "Amnesty act," which rendered all their labor vain. The captives were set at liberty, and about twenty of the captors continued on to visit Lawrence, where on account of their leader being named "Hamilton," he was supposed by the citizens of that city to be Capt. Charles A. Hamilton, of Marais des Cygnes Massacre fame, and a reception very much more earnest than kind was accorded them. (See history of Lawrence.)

After the passage of the "Amnesty act," there was but little more trouble in Bourbon County on account of border feuds. Peace had apparently come to stay, and when the Fourth of July approached the people decided to hold on that day a grand celebration, as an evidence, not only of their patriotism, but of their desire for peace as well. The people of Fort Scott prepared and gave the dinner, and a most memorable dinner it was. There were wagon loads of beef, mutton and pork, and immense quantities of bread, cake and pie. A four-horse wagon load of ice was brought from the Marais des Cygnes, for the purpose of making lemonade. Everybody participated in the ceremonies. Gov. Ransom was President of the day; Judge Joseph Williams, Col. Judson, Judge Farwell, M. E. Hudson, Thomas Helm, S. W. Campbell and Col. Moran, Vice Presidents; Rev. Mr. Thompson, Chaplain; Mason Williams read the Declaration of Independence, and L. A. McCord was Orator of the Day. In the evening there was a grand ball at the Free-State Hotel.

During the remainder of this year, immigration poured into the county, and material progress was visible on all sides. The principal occupation of the District Court was the punishment of horse-thieves. In May, 1860, the arch horse-thief of the border was brought to trial in Fort Scott. This was "Pickles," whom everybody knew. The indictment upon which he was to be tried was for robbing Indian Seth the fall before. Some members of "Pickles'" gang came to the Little Osage, and endeavored to raise a rescuing party; and, in order to forestall any such attempt, members of the Vigilance Committee armed themselves and poured into town, to the number of nearly two hundred. Having assembled, their object changed from that of preventing a rescue by Pickles' friends, to making a rescue themselves, and executing summary vengeance upon one who had committed more crimes than any other two of the border thieves. The officers of the law who had Pickles in charge were too wary and adroit to permit this programme of the Vigilance Committee being carried out, and Pickles was too sharp to voluntarily place himself in their hands by pleading "not guilty," which would have been the result of so pleading, because he could not have been convicted on the evidence. He, therefore, in order to save his life, plead guilty, was immediately sentenced to one year in the penitentiary, and to pay a fine of $500, and escorted to Washington. Pickles fared much better than did Hugh Carlin, who, having given the settlers on Little Osage a great deal of trouble, was taken from the house of F. A. Monroe, and hanged by a party of mounted men belonging to the Vigilance Committee, about the 10th of July. This was followed about November 16, 1860, by the killing of L. D. Moore by C. R. Jennison, in retaliation for the killing of Carlin. Jennison's party consisted of about twenty-five picked men. Upon reaching Moore's house, Jennison rapped on the door and demanded admittance. This was refused. Jennison immediately kicked the door down, and shot Moore while he was sitting on the side of his bed. Jennison then passed into the house, and took Moore by the wrist, holding it until the pulse ceased to beat, when he exclaimed: "Boys, he's dead." Jennison and his party then went to the house of M. E. Hudson, whose wife was a relative of L. D. Moore. Mr. Hudson was away from home. Jennison informed Mrs. Hudson of what he had done, and, while she was weeping, ordered her to provide breakfast for his party, which order she obeyed.

L. D. Moore settled in Kansas in 1857, on a claim near Mapleton. He was a Pro-slavery man, was a member of the "anti-horse thief" or "dark lantern association," and had taken an active part in the lynching of Guthrie and Carlin, his office having been that of hangman.

About the 1st of December, Gen. Harney, in command of about 200 United States soldiers, arrived in Fort Scott for the purpose of attending the land sales, which came off on the 3d of that month. The attendance was very large; everything passed off quietly, but only fourteen eighty acre tracts were sold—the prices ranging from $1.25 to $5.50 per acre.

On the 8th of the month, Gen. D. M. Frost's brigade of Missouri militia reached and camped at the State Line; and Gen. Frost and staff rode into Fort Scott to confer with Gov. Medary and Gen. Harney with reference to raids into Missouri from Kansas.

BOURBON COUNTY IN THE CIVIL WAR.

The first meeting in Bourbon County which had for its object the discussion of questions likely to grow out of the gigantic war which was then impending was held March 13, 1861. Upon the invitation of many leading citizens of Fort Scott, Gen. J. H. Lane was present and delivered an address. He advocated the cultivation of friendly relations between Missouri and Kansas. A large number of citizens of the former State were present.

The next meeting of the kind was held at Barnesville March 20. A series of resolutions was reported to the meeting, which were conservative and in favor of States Rights. Gen. Lane addressed this meeting, expressing similar sentiments to those delivered by him the week previous at Fort Scott.

These meetings occurred before the firing on Fort Sumter, and were comparatively but moderate affairs. After war had once begun by the bombardment of a United States fortress, the thrill of fiery indignation was felt as keenly in Kansas as anywhere in the Union. On Thursday night, April 24, a Union demonstration occurred in Fort Scott, which was the largest that up to that time the city had ever seen, and which was unsurpassable in enthusiasm and unanimity. Past party difficulties were forgotten, patriotic songs were sung, patriotic addresses delivered, and the wildest and heartiest applause greeted every expression and person that was in favor of the Union. It was a demonstration in which Fort Scott, and Bourbon County, and every true and loyal Kansan and American may always feel the deepest pride. In the latter part of April, two companies of volunteers were formed on Drywood, under Capts. Boring and Brown, and on the 1st of May, two companies were formed in Fort Scott. The officers of one company were: Captain, C. W. Blair; Lieutenants, A. R. Allison, R. L. Phillips and Charles Bull. Of the other company—Captain, A. McDonald; Lieutenants, Charles Dimon, William Gallaher and A. F. Bicking. These two companies were a few weeks afterward consolidated under C. W. Blair, Captain, and W. C. Ranson, C. O. Judson and A. R. Allison, Lieutenants. The total number of members in this company, after consolidation, was sixty-three. It left for Lawrence soon afterward, where it was to be armed, uniformed and mustered into the service of the Government. But after marching to Lawrence—where Capt. Blair was promoted to the Lieutenant Colonelcy of the Second Kansas Regiment, and Lieut. Ransom elected Captain—and then to Wyandotte, preparatory to crossing to Kansas City, to be mustered in, the patriotic fervor of three-fourths of the members of the company had so far subsided, that this number backed squarely out and counter-marched for home May 19, 1861, so that the company as such was never mustered in.

Early in this month, a company was organized on Lightning Creek, with John T. McWhirt, Captain, and Roswell Seeley, John Tully and John F. Gates, Lieutenants. The company was named originally the "Lightning Guards." Some members of the company preferred the name "Lightning Blues," but the majority fearing this name might be mistaken for "Blue Lightning," chose the former name.

Capt. Blair's company, whose first term of service was so brief, was named "Frontier Guard No. 1." Frontier Guard No. 2 was organized with A. McDonald, Captain. Upon his resignation, W. T. Campbell was elected Captain, the Lieutenants being S. B. Gordon, C. O. Judson and John F. White. These two companies had a parade on July 4, inviting all the other companies to participate that had been organized in the county. The Drywood Company under Capt. Boring, and the Mill Creek Company under Capt. Hall, responded.

On the 5th a battle was fought at Carthage, Mo., which had the effect to greatly alarm and disturb the citizens in the southeastern part of the county. Many families left their homes, apprehensive of an attack from the rebel forces. Shortly after this alarm, Gen. Lyon authorized Capts. W. C. Ransom and W. T. Campbell, each to raise a company of one hundred men, to act as Home Guards. Afterward another company was authorized, and thus there were three companies of Bourbon County Home Guards, all of which went into camp at Fort Scott. These three companies were infantry; afterward a cavalry company was raised, and the four companies were the origin of the Sixth Kansas, with the following officers: Major, W. R. Judson; Captains, W. C. Ransom, W. T. Campbell, Z. Gower and L. R. Jewell, of Companies A, B, C and D, respectively. The activity and proximity of the war in Missouri led Gen. Lane to order a considerable number of troops to Fort Scott toward the latter part of August. Five companies of the Third Regiment under Col. Montgomery, arrived on the 20th from Mound City, and other troops arrived, until the aggregate number was about 2,000. A large number of Osage Indians also arrived about this time and offered their services to the Government. This was now headquarters for Gen. Lane's Division, which rapidly increased in size, and as rapidly improved in discipline and appointments. Two companies of Col. Johnson's Fifth Kansas were also stationed at Barnesville. The Rebel Gen. Rains, with 14,000 men, was operating in Missouri, and contemplated an attack on Southern Kansas. September 1, he approached within ten miles of Fort Scott, drove in Lane's pickets, and stole a number of mules. Until this was done, his presence was not suspected. Col. Johnson made immediate pursuit, but inflicted upon them only the small loss of two or three killed. All the troops in the vicinity were then concentrated at Fort Scott preparatory to its defense against an expected attack, and a force of 500 cavalry with one mounted howitzer sent out to reconnoiter. This force met the enemy's pickets five miles west of Drywood, and drove them back across Drywood Creek to camp. Quite a severe battle was fought, until the Union troops exhausted their ammunition, and retreated in good order toward Fort Scott. The infantry was stationed on the heights east of the city, to receive the rebels in case the anticipated attacks were made, maintaining their position until the darkness of the night and the raging of a heavy thunder storm rendered it highly improbable that an attack would be made. Gen. Rains' force was much superior to that of Gen. Lane, which made Gen. Lane apprehensive of the results of a general engagement. He therefore led the infantry back to Fort Lincoln, on the Little Osage, thirteen miles to the northward, leaving the cavalry in Fort Scott with orders to defend the city to the last, and then burn it rather than let it fall into the enemy's hands. Fort Scott was thus left practically without defense. It was almost entirely deserted by the citizens. Only four women had the courage to remain. These ladies were Mrs. H. T. Wilson, Mrs. William Smith, Mrs. J. S. and Miss Sallie Miller. They determined to remain until their feet should be guided in their flight by the light from their burning homes.

A few days thereafter, the rebel forces beat a precipitate retreat toward Independence, pursued from Fort Lincoln to Pappinsville, by Cols. Johnson and Jennison, who returned with two hundred cattle and a number of "contrabands."

The removal of the greater part of the troops from Fort Scott, at a time when that city was menaced by a rebel force considerably larger than Gen. Lane's whole command, was a most remarkable piece of strategy on the part of that most remarkable of men, and is explained by his enemies on the ground that he had more solicitude for his own safety than for the safety of the town.

Notwithstanding numerous efforts were made to have the base of supplies removed from Fort Scott to Fort Lincoln, Mound City and Humboldt, none of them were successful, and when the troops were paid off, business was lively in the former place; and when about March 1, 1862, on account of the advance of the rebel armies into Northwest Arkansas, a considerable military force, under Col. Deitzler, consisting of the First, Fifth and Sixth Kansas, the Ninth, Twelfth and Thirteenth Wisconsin, the Second Ohio Cavalry and the Second Indiana Battery, was stationed there, money was still more plenty and times still more improved. During March, Lieut. Strong, of the Second Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, built a strong and handsome bridge across the Marmaton, for the convenience of Government trains. This bridge was swept away about April 20, by a tremendous flood, the waters rising fifteen feet above the bridge.

Lieut. Col. Jewell, Sixth Kansas, was appointed Post Commander at Fort Scott, June 1, 1862. Lieut. Col. Blair, of the Second Kansas, raised in Bourbon County a battery of artillery in August. This was the Second Kansas Battery, and when completed was officered as follows: C. W. Blair, Commanding Officer; First Lieutenants, E. A. Smith and D. C. Knowles; Second Lieutenants, A. G. Clark and A. Wilson. Soon afterward, Lieut. Col. Blair was commissioned Brigadier General, and in 1863 succeeded to the command of the post and remained in command until the close of the war.

A number of forts were erected in the city of Fort Scott during the war; Fort Henning, on Birch street, between Jones and Judson; Fort Blair, on Locust street, between Main street and Scott avenue, and Fort Insley, north of the Plaza.

The most exciting incident of the war in Bourbon County after the battle of Drywood and the retreat of Gen. Lane to Fort Lincoln, was the passage of Price's army through the eastern part of it, in October, 1864. Before the result of the battle of Mine Creek was known, the people of Fort Scott were hourly expecting Price's forces to march into their city and raze it to the ground. Any speculative individual with a few dollars in his pocket could just then have bought and paid for the whole town. It was the darkest hour its people had ever seen. But just at evening of that day, Col. Moonlight, who had kept on Price's right flank from Mound City, arrived with the most welcome news that Price had been defeated, and that Gen. Blair, with his command would enter the city within an hour. Everybody was overjoyed and a feast was soon begun for the tired and hungry soldiers. The next day saw the entrance into the city of a part of Price's army, as prisoners—Maj. Gen. Marmaduke, Brig. Gen. Cabell, Col. Slemmens and about one thousand private soldiers. Had Price entered the city he could easily have destroyed it. This was the last actual danger Fort Scott was ever in from rebel soldiers.

As Price's army crossed the valley of the Little Osage it committed numerous murders and robberies. At Fort Lincoln they killed Andrew Stevens, and further down the river Mr. Goodall and Mr. Miller. They burned the houses of Richard Spafford and Mr. Hopkins; robbed many families of all their money, provisions, clothing and bed-clothing, and stole what horses they could find.

Bourbon County made an honorable record in the war. It furnished its full proportion of soldiers and was fifth in rank in regard to the number of her citizens that entered the militia, the number enrolled being 676, while the number organized was 550. The county furnished one Brigadier General—C. W. Blair; one Colonel—W. R. Judson; one Lieutenant Colonel—Lewis R. Jewell, in the volunteer service, and in the militia, two Colonels—J. Stadden and George P. Eaves.

Since the war steady progress has been made, as will be seen by an examination of the various paragraphs on railroads, public schools, etc., and on the city of Fort Scott.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

The county was organized September 12, 1855. S. A. Williams, as Probate Judge, administered the oath of office as Commissioners to Col. H. T. Wilson and Charles B. Wingfield. B. F. Hill was appointed Sheriff and William Margrave, Deputy Sheriff of the county. On the 17th of September, the following officers were appointed: Clerk, James J. Farley; Constable, John F. Cottrell; Justice, Thomas Watkins. William Margrave had been appointed a Justice of the Peace in December, 1854, by Gov. Reeder and was the first Justice in the county. On the 15th of October four additional Justices, and three Constables were appointed, and as Treasurer, A. Hornbeck; Assessor, W. W. Spratt; Coroner, H. R. Kelso.

In November the county was divided into the following townships: Little Osage, Timberhill, Scott, Drywood and Russell. In 1858, the name of Russell Township was changed to Marion, and Freedom Township was organized. In 1859, Franklin and Marmaton were organized; in 1866, Walnut and Pawnee, and in 1870, Mill Creek, making eleven townships in the county.

From the organization of the county to January, 1858, its affairs were in charge of the Probate Judge, assisted by two Commissioners, this body being styled the County Court, at which time a Board of Supervisors took the place of the court. This Board consisting of one Supervisor from each township. In 1860, this form of government was changed to the present—that of three Commissioners. Under this arrangement the first Commissioners were Isaac Ford, Lester Ray and G. W. Miller.

The first election for county officers held in the fall of 1856, resulted as follows: Clerk. James J. Farley; Treasurer, A. Hornbeck; Sheriff, B. F. Hill; Probate Judge, S. A, Williams; Register of Deeds, James J. Farley.

In 1855, the county seat was located at Fort Scott, that being then as now the most important town in the county. In 1858, on account of the border troubles it was moved to Marmaton by a special law of the Legislature enacted for that purpose. An election was held on the 11th of May, 1863, for the purpose of re-locating the county seat, which resulted as follows: For Fort Scott, 700 votes; Centerville, 279; Mapleton, 14; and for Fort Lincoln, 1 vote. Fort Scott therefore having received a majority of all the votes cast was proclaimed the county seat; no attempt has since been made to remove it.

The members of the Territorial Council from Bourbon County with date of election, are as follows: William Barbee, March 30, 1855; George S. Hillyer, 1857; Watson Stewart, 1859.

The members of the State Senate have been: J. C. Burnett, 1861; Isaac Ford, 1862; A. Danford, 1864; D. B. Emmert, 1866; M. V. Voss, 1868; W. E. Guerin, 1872; J. W. Bainum, 1874; W. R. Griffin, 1876 and 1878; E. F. Ware, 1880.

List of Representatives in the Territorial Legislature, with the date of election have been as follows: Samuel A. Williams and Joseph C. Anderson, March 30, 1855; W. W. Spratt and B. Brantly, 1856; Stephen C. Cooper, 1857; T. R. Roberts, 1858; Horatio Knowles, 1859; J. C. Burnett, 1860.

The Representatives in the State Legislature have been: H. Knowles, S. B. Mahurin and J. T. Neal, 1861; D. B. Jackman, J. Hawkins, D. R. Cobb and C. F. Drake, 1862; D. R. Cobb, J. G. Miller, R. P. Stevens and William Stone, 1863; L. D. Clevender, D. L. Campbell, N. Griswold and W. Z. Strong, 1864; C. W. Blair, N. Griswold, W. H. Green and J. S. Wilson, 1865; S. A. Manlove, W. N. McIntosh, W. F. Travers and J. S. Wilson, 1866; William Hinton, E. M. Hulett. J. B. Moore and B. F. Smalley, 1867; J. B. Moore, D. D. Roberts, L. Roberts and W. Simpson, 1868; George P. Eaves, C. W. Libby, J. A. Tiffany and W. C. Webb, 1869; W. H. Green, C. W. Libby, C. S. Steele and W. C. Webb, 1870; W. H. Green, J. B. Greening and L. G. Palmer, 1871; Jacob Brenner, W. J. Cochran and R. P. McDonald, 1872 S. Bird, David Johnson and T. F. Robley, 1873; John Raney, A. Goucher and E. M. Hulett 1874; E. P. Davis, John J. Stewart and B. J. Waters, 1875; John J. Stewart, Roberts Geffs

The Four Constitutions.—During the early history of the Territory Bourbon County was Pro-slavery. At the election of March 30, 1855, Joseph C. Anderson, a resident of Missouri, and S. A. Williams, the Pro-slavery candidates for the Legislature, received 315 and 313 votes respectively, while John Hamilton and William Margrave, the Free-State candidates, received respectively but 35 and 16. William Barbee, elected to the Council, received 343 votes, all that were cast in the district. At the election held October 9, 1855, for Delegates to the Topeka Constitutional Convention, John Hamilton and W. R. Griffith each received but 39 votes, and ex-Gov. Reeder received the same number for Delegate to Congress. The vote on the adoption of the Topeka Constitution was taken December 15. Delegates to the Lecompton Constitutional Convention were elected June 15, 1857. Col. H. T. Wilson and Blake Little were chosen from Bourbon County, the former receiving 204 and the latter 187 votes. On October 5, at the election for Delegate to Congress, Epaphroditus Ransom received 175 votes, to 96 for M. J. Parrott, and at the election held December 21 for officers under the Lecompton Constitution, the Pro-slavery candidate for Governor received 523 votes, to 281 for the Free-State candidate. But when the question of adopting the Lecompton Constitution was submitted, January 4, 1858, the electors of Bourbon cast 268 votes against it to 55 for it with slavery and none for it without slavery. On August 2, 1858, the "English Swindle," or "Lecompton Junior," as the English bill was variously called, received but 37 votes, while 429 were cast against it. Under the Lecompton Constitution, Blake Little had been elected to the Senate and W. C. Campbell to the House.

The delegates from Bourbon County to the Leavenworth Constitutional Convention were W. R. Griffith, M. E. Hudson and G. W. Campbell. At the election on the constitution, Fort Scott cast one vote for it and 58 against it. The vote of the county can not be ascertained.

The first election under the Wyandotte Constitution movement occurred March 28, 1859. Bourbon cast 333 votes for the convention and 47 against it. J. C. Burnett and W. R. Griffith were elected delegates to the convention, receiving 281 and 294 votes respectively. On the 4th of October the adoption of the Wyandotte Constitution was voted on, the result being 464 votes for it to 256 against, the homestead exemption clause receiving 530 votes to 102 against it. November 8, at the election of Delegate to Congress, Saunders W. Johnson, Democratic candidate, received 251 votes, and Marcus J. Parrott, Republican, 368—Bourbon having thus become a strong Republican county. On the 1st of June, 1860, according to the census taken at that time, the county contained a population of 6,102.

SCHOOL AND OTHER STATISTICS.

The first school district organized in the county was what is now District No. 10, December 10, 1859. This was the only one organized that year. In 1860, four districts were organized; in 1861, none; in 1862, eight; in 1863, twenty-three, and in 1864, eight. In 1867, the organization of new school districts again commenced, and from that time to 1881, with the exception of 1878, from one to nine districts were organized each year. There are now ninety-eight districts in the county, including Fort Scott. In 1862, the number of scholars in the county was 722; in 1865, 3,261; in 1870, 5,312; in 1880, 7,015, and in 1882, 7,866—males, 3,995; females, 3,871. RAILROAD HISTORY.

The first action taken by the Commissioners of Bourbon County looking to the building of a railroad through the county was upon a petition for the privilege of voting $150,000 in bonds to the Kansas & Neosho Valley Railroad Company, and of subscribing to the capital stock of said road a like amount. This was November 18, 1865, when an election was ordered to be held December 16th. At this election the proposition was adopted by the electors by a vote of 705 for the bonds to 220 against them. On the 22nd of December the Commissioners of Bourbon County sent an address to Thomas Carney, Mayor of Leavenworth, asking that Leavenworth County be given an opportunity to vote $200,000 or $250,000 in bonds in aid of the project, before the election of new officers of the railroad company should be held, and before the change of the name of the road should be made, which had been promised Bourbon and Linn Counties if they would vote bonds. Individual subscriptions to the stock were also solicited and as an inducement to private parties to subscribe, this new election had been promised in order that the people so subscribing might be represented in the company by directors of their own choosing.

On September 10, 1866, it was resolved by the Commissioners that as the K. & W. V. R. R. Company had failed to change the name of its road, that the tender of the subscription of $150,000 unless the name were changed within thirty days, and the County Clerk was forbidden to issue the bonds without instructions from the Commissioners.

On June 29, 1868, Col. K. Coates, President of the K. & W. V. R. R. Company, asked that the bonds voted to the road be issued and placed in the hands of the trustee, but not to be delivered to the company until the road should be completed to Fort Scott, and on the same day the Commissioners entered into an agreement with the railroad company, whereby the county agreed to sell its $150,000 of stock in the road for the nominal consideration of $5, and on the conditions that the company shall build and operate the road from Kansas City to Fort Scott within two years from that date; and also agree that when the road is built and in operation to Fort Scott, then the bonds shall be issued, provided that in the meantime the name of the road shall have been changed to the Missouri River, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad. The name of the road was changed previous to April 29, 1869, on which day the company, by its attorney, B. F. Simpson, made application for the laying off of a route through Bourbon County for said road, and on the 1st of June the route was laid off by the Commissioners to the southern boundary of the county of Bourbon.

On July 22, Col. A. S. Johnson, Land Commissioner for the road, submitted an application to the Board, asking that a day be set for appraising damages and locating the route through the Neutral Lands in Bourbon County, and in response to the application, August 31 was chosen.

The M. R., Ft. S. & G. R. R. was completed to Fort Scott in December, 1869, and on January 7, 1870, the bonds for $150,000 were delivered to Col. Coates, President, the company having fulfilled its part of the contract of June 29, 1868; and the stock for $150,000 was at the same time delivered to the company, the county receiving its $5 in cash, promised on the day of sale to be paid for the same. The name of this road was changed to the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad.

The first step in the Tebo & Neosho Railroad movement in Bourbon County was taken May 7, 1867, on which day the people voted on the question of subscribing $150,000 to the stock of the company, and issuing a like amount of county bonds. The election resulted in the casting of 468 votes for the proposition, and 442 votes against it, and there were no returns from Franklin and Walnut Townships.

On July 23, 1869, the Commissioners decided that it was not advisable to subscribe, at that time, to the capital stock of the Tebo & Neosho Railroad Company; but it was ordered that $150,000 be subscribed to the capital stock of any railroad company that would build a road, starting at Fort Scott and running north of the Marmaton in the general direction of Humboldt, and that bonds be issued in payment therefor, provided that at a general election held for the purpose, the people of the county should approve of the order, and that said election should be held August 24, 1869; and it was also understood that a vote in favor of this proposition would be a vote re-affirming the election of May 7, 1867. The proposition was approved of, August 24, 1869, by the casting of 1,428 votes for it to 703 against it. On the 10th of November, 1869, the Board of Commissioners, convinced of the propriety and necessity of being represented in the directory of the Tebo & Neosho Railroad Company, appointed Dr. J. S. Redfield as agent of Bourbon County to attend the meetings of the company's directors, with authority to cancel the county's subscription to the stock of the company, departed from its promises.

On the 19th of December, 1873, the Tebo & Neosho Railroad bonds having been declared void by the Supreme Court of Kansas, it was ordered that the $4,400 collected to be applied to the payment of the interest thereon be transferred to the county fund, and the balance was ordered to be expended in the purchase of outstanding county internal improvement bonds.

On the 13th of October, 1870, the Clerk of the county, was authorized to subscribe $150,000 to the capital stock of Fort Scott & Allen County Railroad Company, under the provisions of the election held August 24, 1869, on the condition that the railroad should be completed from Fort Scott to the west line of the county by July 1, 1872. On February 13, 1872, the Fort Scott, Humboldt & Western Railroad Company, as successors to the Fort Scott & Allen County Company, made application for the issuance of the bonds promised on conditions to the latter; but as the conditions had not been complied with, the application was refused and denied. But the Chairman and Clerk of the Board were authorized to sign, issue and deliver to the Fort Scott, Humboldt & Western Railroad Company, bonds for $150,000, upon the conditions that after the road should be built and operated for five miles, then bonds to the amount of $7,500 should be issued, and similarly for each succeeding five miles built, until the whole amount of $150,000 should be issued.

On the 12th of August, 1873, the latter company made application for the issuing of the bonds, but the Commissioners, having no evidence that the company had secured the right of way, or that it filed a copy of the map or profile of its road in the office of the County Clerk, as required to do by law, refused the application, and the Clerk was ordered to deliver to the Board the lithographed bonds, which had not been signed, and the Board themselves then proceeded to burn and destroy the bonds.

On Tuesday, February 13, 1872, an election was held on the question of subscribing $150,000 to the capital stock of the Topeka, Fort Scott & Memphis Railroad Company, and $25,000 to that of the Lexington, Lake & Gulf Company, on the conditions with respect to the former company, that it should build its road through Mapleton, and locate its general office and machine and work shops at Fort Scott, the road to be in operation, and office and shops to be erected, by May 1, 1873. As the result of the election, there were cast 2,185 votes for the proposition, 820 against it, and 8 scattering—total vote, 3,013. But as this company failed to build its road, and to erect its general office and machine and work shops by May 1, 1873, the bonds, which had not yet been signed, were likewise burned and destroyed, August 12, 1873, and on the same day the proposition to subscribe $25,000 to the Lexington, Lake & Gulf Company's stock was declared void, the company having taken no steps toward building the road.

On July 11, 1874, the Fort Scott, Southeastern & Memphis Railroad Company, asked that Commissioners proceed to assess damages for right of way of said road from Fort Scott to the Missouri State line. This road was built from its junction with the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad, four miles south of Fort Scott, to Springfield, Mo., in 1880 and 1881.

On July 26, 1881, an election was held in Scott, Timberhill and Mill Creek Townships on the question of voting in each township $10,000 in bonds to Fort Scott, Topeka & Lincoln Railroad Company, on the condition that the road should be built by January 1, 1883. In Scott and Timberhill Townships the bonds were voted by majorities of 114 and 116 respectively, but in Mill Creek the vote was a tie. At a second election held in this township October 17, 1881, the bonds were voted down by a vote of 58 to 81 against them. This company was merged into or re-organized as the Kansas & Nebraska Central Railroad Company, in 1882, and a new election held in the same three townships on the question of subscribing in each of them $10,000, and in Franklin Township, $15,000, to the capital stock of this latter company, the limit of time given in which to complete the building of the road from Fort Scott through each township to the north or west side of Franklin Township being January 1, 1885. The election was held on November 21 and 22, with the following results: Scott Township cast 116 votes for the subscription, and 70 against it; Mill Creek 63 for, and 86 against; Timberhill, 137 for, 36 against; and Franklin, 156 for, and 118 against it.

Marion Township aided the building of the St. Louis, Fort Scott & Wichita Railroad to the extent of $10,000, and these are the only township railroad bonds outstanding.

The Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad was built in 1870, and as the successor of the Tebo & Neosho Railroad Company inherited the $150,000 issued to that company, and which were twice declared void by the United States Circuit Court for the district of Kansas, on the ground that at the original election, held May 7, 1867, the returns from Franklin Township, although in on the day prescribed for the counting of the vote, were not counted by the Commissioners, while had these returns been counted the majority against the bonds would have been 100, instead of, as reported, 26, in favor of them; and also because at the election of August 24, 1869, there was no opportunity given to vote for or against one proposition without voting for or against both.

But as there was danger of the case going before the Supreme Court of the United States, which has always held that such bonds are valid in the hands of innocent holders, and in this event the county would have both principal to pay, the Commissioners on November, 1882, compromised the matter by issuing bonds to the amount of $30,000, due in thirty years, bearing six per cent interest; thus making the total bonded indebtedness of the county $219,200. The county now has eighty miles of railroad.

FORT SCOTT.

Fort Scott is situated in the eastern part of the county, five miles from the Missouri State line. It is on the south bank of the Marmaton, on ground sufficiently uneven to admit of excellent drainage. It is sursounded by a natural amphitheater of hills, from whose summits a splendid view of the city and adjacent country may be obtained. Fort Scott has been styled by a certain writer and not perhaps unjustly, the "Pittsburgh of Kansas," on account of its present and prospective importance as a manufacturing center. Its natural advantages are both numerous and great. There is an abundance of building stone, lime, cement, coal, water and natural gas, the latter, however, has not as yet been utilized. As the country is settled up and developed, Fort Scott must naturally increase in population and importance; and she may, by a continuance of generous and judicious assistance to such new manufacturing enterprises as may desire or as may be induced to locate there, not only rapidly enhance her own interests and growth, but may also largely aid in the development of the agricultural interests of the surrounding country.

From 1842 to 1854, Fort Scott was nothing but a military post. In the latter year the troops were withdrawn, and on the 16th of May, 1855, the buildings erected by the Government at a cost of about $52,000, were sold at auction. The block farthest toward the west, which was afterward known as the Fort Scott or "Free State" Hotel, was bought by A. Hornbeck for $500; the next block east by Col. H. T. Wilson, for $300; the next by Edward Greenwood for $505; and the next one farthest toward the east by J. Mitchell for $450, or a total of $1,755. The families of Col. Wilson and Capt. John Hamilton were the only ones not in the employ of the Government at the time of the withdrawal of the troops. Col. Wilson continued to conduct his store, which stood on Market street near the present location of Has. Clark's agricultural implement house. The first hotel in the city was opened in the west block of the old Government buildings by Col. Thomas Arnett.

During the year 1855, quite a number of other people came to Fort Scott, among them Dr. Hill, R. Harkness, D. F. Greenwood, Thomas Dodge; and nearly all the land in the county at this time belonged to the New York Indians, hence nothing could be done but to select and hold claims until such time as they should by purchase of or treaty with the Indians be thrown open to settlement. A number of claims were thus taken and held, but nothing was done toward organizing a town company or building up a town until June, 1857, about the first of which month George A. Crawford, D. H. Wier, D. W. Holbrook, Norman Eddy, James E. Jones and Charles Dimon arrived on the ground to purchase claims and lay out a town. On the 8th of the month the Fort Scott Town Company was organized, and consisted of George A. Crawford, President; G. W. Jones, Secretary; H. T. Wilson, Treasurer; Norman Eddy, D. H. Wier, D. W. Holbrook, William R. Judson, T. R. Blackburn and E. S. Lowman. Soon afterward Dr. Blake Little was made a conditional member of the company, and Judge Joseph Williams purchased the interest of G. W. Jones. The town company purchased the "claims" of H. T. Wilson, G. W. Jones, N. E. Herson, A. Hornbeck and S. A. Williams. The company was incorporated in February, 1860, and obtained title to their land on the 17th of September following, through the Mayor, Joseph Ray. The town site then consisted of 320 acres, but subsequently the company purchased 200 acres more. The company dealt liberally with the old settlers, donating to them the lots upon which the houses purchased of the Government stood. They also donated lots to all the religious denominations, one to the Government for a National cemetery, and a square to the county for a court house and jail.

In July, 1857, Ex-Gov. Epaphroditus Ransom, of Michigan, who had been appointed Receiver of the Land Office, arrived and opened the office. He was accompanied by his son-in-law, George J. Clark, and the latter's family, of wife and two children. George W. Clarke also arrived about this time, having been appointed Register of the Land Office, conducting the business after his arrival in the name of Mr. Doak, his brother-in-law. In August, the following named parties arrived: Horatio Knowles, T. R. Roberts, Joseph Ray, Charles Bull, Orlando Darling, B. P. McDonald, J. N. Roach and William Gallaher. A plat of the town site was made immediately thereafter by O. Darling, and a second one by O. Edwards. Some time during the year, Dr. Blake Little & Son opened a store in the old quartermaster's building. John G. Stewart started a blacksmith shop, and Sheriff Hill and William Barnes each opened a saloon. George A. Crawford, W. R. Judson and C. Dimon bought the "Free State Hotel," which for a long time was a popular resort for travelers. Across the Plaza to the southwest, about the beginning of the year 1858, a Mr. McKay opened the Western Hotel, which at once became Pro-slavery headquarters, and was henceforward known as the "Pro-slavery Hotel." On the 1st of January, 1858, William T. Campbell, who had just previously moved into Fort Scott from Barnesville, succeeded C. Dimon as proprietor of the "Free State Hotel," and on the 18th gave an "opening ball." One fiddle furnished the music, and the calling was done by Joseph Ray, to the eminent satisfaction of all, except one Pro-slavery young lady, who said she "didn't like that derned Abolition prompting."

During the early part of this winter, Alexander McDonald, E. S. Bowen and A. R. Allison arrived. On the 6th of January, McDonald and Bowen selected a site at the foot of Locust street for a saw mill, which they had purchased in St. Louis. In the early spring the mill was erected, and it sawed all the lumber for the town company's building, and some frame dwelling houses. In the fall a corn-cracker was added to the mill. In the spring two stores had been erected on Market street—one by W. I. Linn, the other by J. S. Caulkins, the store of the former being the first frame building erected in the city outside the Plaza. The first frame dwelling house was erected in the fall by "Uncle Billy" Smith, on the corner of Locust street and Scott avenue. About the same time, a second blacksmith shop was started by O. H. Kelley, and "Fort Roach" was built at the corner of Jones and Hickory streets. It was a small log structure and often served as headquarters for the "jayhawkers," on the occasion of their numerous raids into the city. George J. Clark and William Gallaher erected a small log building, and B. P. McDonald and A. Campbell, a small house on Main street.

The years 1859 and 1860 were for the most part peaceful and devoted to material interests and the building up of the town; during the war but little progress was made; since the war the city has made steady and sure progress, and is justly entitled to the appellation of the "Metropolis of Southeastern Kansas," as a reference to the histories of the local industries and institutions will amply reveal. There is yet, however, one thing lacking, which will doubtless be supplied in due time—a public library and reading room. Heretofore, public spirit has been mainly active in securing railroads, manufactories and other aids to material prosperity. Hereafter this spirit will to some extent lack fields of that kind in which to exert itself, and will naturally be diverted into providing ampler means for the mental improvement of the masses, and thus to wealth add more of intellectual culture, taste and refinement.

CITY GOVERNMENT.

The town of Fort Scott was incorporated by the Legislature of 1855. A Board of Trustees was formed, consisting of six members, as follows: H. S. Wilson, A. Hornbeck, Thomas Dodge, R. O. Roberts, F. Denint and Thomas B. Arnett. This act of incorporation was under and in accordance with the "Bogus Laws" of that date and consequently was ineffectual in law.

The regular and legal incorporation of the place was effected on the 27th day of February, 1860. Col. Judson was elected Mayor; H. T. Wilson was President of the Board of Councilmen, and Joseph Ray was Councilman. Judson, however, declined to serve, and Joseph Ray became Acting Mayor. In 1861, Joseph Ray was elected Mayor, William Gallaher City Clerk, and John S. Miller Recorder. The place was incorporated as comprising the following described tract of land: The whole of the southwest quarter, the west half of the southeast quarter, the southwest fourth of the northeast quarter, the southeast fourth of the northwest quarter of Section 30, Town 25, Range 25, and including an area of 220 acres.

The following is a list of Mayors of Fort Scott, with dates of office:

1860, Col. Judson, resigned, Joseph Ray Acting Mayor; 1861, Joseph Ray; 1862, J. S. Miller; 1863, G. A. Reynolds; 1864, G. Dimon; 1865, Isaac Stadden; 1866, G. Dimon; 1867, John McDonald; 1868, C. F. Drake; 1869, B. P. McDonald, also 1870; 1871, F. R. Boyle, and also 1872; 1873, J. G. Stewart; 1874, J. M. Terry; 1875, C. W. Goodlander, also 1876; 1877 John A. Bryant; 1878, M. Cohen.

POST OFFICE.

The Fort Scott post office was the second one established in Kansas, and took place March 3, 1843, John A. Bugg holding the commission as Postmaster. The establishment of the office was made for the military post then located here and was kept in the Government buildings. H. T. Wilson was appointed Postmaster February 26, 1849, and the office was kept in his store-room. A change of place in which it was kept was made with the change of Postmasters, having been kept at various times in store-rooms, the Hospital building, Town Company's building, Fort Scott Hotel, Land Office, etc. It finally became fixed in the present building which stands on the east point of Market Square.

The office arrangement at first was exceedingly crude, consisting of a small goods box, divided off into pigeon holes, and furnished with two folding doors, so that valuables might be deposited inside and the wooden doors securely locked. In 1857, the revenues of the office amounted to about $8; in 1866, they were more than $1,500; in 1875, $11,500; in 1878, $200,000, and have largely increased regularly since that time.

It was made a money order office in February, 1866, and the first order was issued on February 5th of that year. In 1857, the mail was obtained by means of the stage route from Jefferson City, Mo., a tri-weekly horseback route from Lecompton, also a horseback weekly mail from Westpoint, Montivallo and Sarcoxie, Mo., and from Crawford Seminary, now Baxter Springs, Osage Mission, Coffachiqui, now called Humboldt. The mail is now obtained over the various railroad lines entering the city from all directions, and the office is now one of considerable importance. The following is a list of the Postmasters, from the first appointment to the present incumbent, together with the dates of appointment:

John A. Bugg, March 3, 1843; H. T. Wilson, February 26, 1849; J. J. Farley, January 28, 1856; Wiley Patterson, August 2, 1856; T. H. Casey, July 18, 1857; W. Gallagher, August 20, 1857; David Manlove, May 3, 1861; S. A. Manlove, January 20, 1864; C. W. Blair, March 2, 1867; J. A. Tomlinson, April 16, 1869; J. B. Campbell, March 30, 1871; T. F. Robley, February 26, 1875. He was re-appointed February 27, 1879, and is still in office.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

The early school advantages of Fort Scott, were such as were afforded under the district organizations. A private school was taught in 1857, and, during the next summer Mrs. C. H. Haynes taught a school which was kept in the old hospital building. Up to 1860, the school population of the city was about 300. In 1863, the attendance was 248, and in 1864, it was only 210. Prior to 1863, the city was without any regular house for school purposes. The ladies, seeing the necessity of the matter, took steps toward some improvement in this direction. Accordingly, a petition signed by Mrs. Jane Smith and thirty-three other ladies, was laid before the City Council, asking them to take steps toward the erection of a suitable school building. The matter was referred to a committee, who reported that the city had no jurisdiction of the matter and it was consequently dropped. In the summer of 1863, a City Hall was built, which served for hall, church and school purposes, etc. The School Board in 1869, purchased Block 158, and in the next year erected the Central School Building. It is a large three-story brick building, containing twelve rooms, and cost about $60,000. In 1872, the "East Side" school building was erected at a cost of about $12,000; it was subsequently destroyed by fire, and was replaced in 1880, by a two-story brick schoolhouse containing four rooms, and which was erected at a cost of $6,000.

The school population of the city in 1869 was 520. A school was established for the colored children, and the hospital building was purchased and fitted up for this purpose. A missionary was sent by the Freedman's Home Mission to take charge. The school now comprises four departments. The last school census shows the school population of the city to be 2,300; the enrollment, 1,500; and the average attendance, 1,100.

The schools are thoroughly graded, and include in their course, geometry, the natural sciences, etc., such as are usually taught in the best graded schools of the cities. The management of the schools are under Prof. B. Hudson, as Superintendent, and nineteen teachers, and are thoroughly efficient and ably sustained.

The Kansas Normal College was established at Fort Scott in 1878, by Prof. I. C. Scott, assisted by Prof. D. E. Sanders. The design of the institution is to meet the wants of such persons who desire a practical preparation for the demands of life in the shortest time, and at the least possible expense, consistent with a thorough and systematic knowledge of the various and more practical branches of education. The school was first kept in the Congregational Church, and consisted of about sixty students, under the instruction of two teachers.

There is now an attendance of about 200 students, under a corps of seven teachers, as follows: D. E. Sanders, Principal and Professor of Greek, Natural Sciences, General History and Methods of Teaching; Charles Vickery, Professor of Elocution and Rhetoric; Ella Wickersham, Professor of Latin; William Stryker, Professor of Algebra; E. H. Robbins, Professor of Penmanship and Drawing; E. C. Merris, Professor of Vocal Music; W. J. Bauer, Professor of German.

There are eight courses of study, namely, the Preparatory, Teacher's Scientific, Special Scientific, Classic, Engineering, Musical and Business.

The college building was erected in 1880, and is a tastefully constructed two-story brick building, costing about $6,000. The building contains seven large recitation rooms and other apartments as are necessary in institutions of learning. Contributions were received from the citizens of Fort Scott toward the erection of the building. A two-story frame boarding hall for the accommodation of students was erected in 1881. The terms are exceedingly low and easy, thus placing the advantages within reach of persons of limited means. Among the attendance are students of both sexes from various of the States and Territories. Judging from the rapidity with which the school has acquired popularity and increased attendance, and the ability and enterprise of those who having it in charge, this appears destined to become one among the foremost of the normal educational institutions of the land.

In the midst of the tragic and thrilling incidents of disaster and death with which the early history of Fort Scott is fraught, the Gospel minister, armed with the buckler and shield of the Holy Religion, faced undismayed the glitter of the saber's edge, and proclaimed to the inhabitants in strife, the words of Heaven's King, "Peace on earth, good will among men." At an early period in the city's existence, congregations were formed as soon as the numbers of any particular faith allowed.

The First Presbyterian Church was the first Christian organization that was effected in the city. In the beginning, the congregation was extremely small, having been organized in the summer of 1859, by Rev. Mr. Rankin, of Buffalo, N. Y., with a membership of only three persons; these were Mr. John Calkins, Mrs. Emiline McDonald and Mrs. Jane Smith. For some time, Mr. Rankin preached in hopefulness to this little flock, and after him, the work was taken up by Rev. Mr. Mitchell, who remained with the charge until 1861, holding services once in two weeks.

The church was then without a minister for some time, until the Board of Home Missions sent Rev. A. Warner to take the charge, who continued to hold meetings at this place, monthly, for about two years, and was succeeded in 1865 by Rev. George Irwin, who remained about three years, when Rev. T. Y. Gardner accepted a call, and continued pastor up to 1871. In January, 1872, Rev. W. C. Porter accepted the call of the people, with whom he has since remained. The present membership of the congregation is 100.

The first trustees of the church were: G. A. Crawford, W. R. Judson, H. T. Wilson, J. S. Redfield, S. A. Williams and A. McDonald.

The early services of the congregation were held in the hospital building. The Fort Scott Town Company deeded to the trustees two lots upon which to build a church house, April 1, 1861. The erection of the building began in April, 1864, and was completed in September of the next year. Rev. George Irwin preached the first sermon in the new house, November 26, 1865, and dedicated the house December 3.

St. Andrew's Episcopal Church was partially organized in 1859, by G. J. Clark, Gen. Blair and C. H. Haynes. Later in the fall of that year, the perfecting of the organization took place under the superintendence of Rev. Charles Reynolds, D. D., of Lawrence. Gov. Ransom was made Senior Warden; C. H. Haynes, Junior Warden; G. A. Crawford, C. W. Blair, A. McDonald, G. J. Clark and W. T. Campbell, Vestrymen. Rev. Mr. Reynolds, as Post Chaplain United States Army, came to the parish through the instrumentality of Gen. Blair.

The first services were held in the Government building, used for a hospital at the time. Afterward services were conducted on Sundays in a building used during the week for a theatre, and later in the City Hall, until the church building was erected.

Soon after the congregation was organized, a committee was appointed by the vestry, for the purpose of completing arrangements for the erection of a church. Two lots were donated by the Town Company, and a few of the ladies, headed by Mrs. C. H. Haynes, solicited contributions. In this way enough money was raised to erect the walls of the house and almost pay for roofing it. The breaking out of hostilities between the North and South suspended further work upon the building, as also parish services. The building, in an unfinished state, was rented to the Government as an arsenal, for which the officers in command of the post agreed to floor the building and put in doors and windows, which they did after a fashion, without reference to elegance or taste.

On the 21st of October, 1866, after hostilities were ended, Rev. J. M. Kendrick took charge of the parish as the first rector. The building was improved and seated with pews, the chancel arranged, and a cabinet organ was donated by the ladies of the congregation. In 1869, still further improvements were added to the house. The chancel was carpeted and a communion set purchased. In 1872, the entire audience room was carpeted; gas fixtures and a font, donated by the Sunday-school, were put in, and the building underwent some internal improvement. A parsonage building was completed in the spring of 1870, costing $2,110. A part of the money for this purpose was obtained from the sale of lots in the eastern part of the city, and the balance was raised by the Ladies' Sewing Society. Shortly afterward, the entire church grounds were enclosed with a neat picket fence.

This was the second church building erected in the city, and is a large stone structure, having a capacity for seating about two hundred and fifty persons. The congregation at present has a membership of forty-five, under charge of Rev. B. Hartley, pastor.

The Methodist Episcopal Congregation was established in 1865. Earlier services, however, had been held by this denomination. During the war, the Methodist Army Chaplains held occasional services at Fort Scott, as they passed through the place, or being regularly stationed at the post. After the close of the war, Rev. S. Brooks was sent to the charge, under whose administration it became organized. Rev. C. R. Rice was stationed here in the spring of 1866, and in the following spring was succeeded by Rev. John Paulson. After a continued service of about three years, Mr. Paulson was called to become presiding elder, in place of Rev. J. D. Knox, who resigned on account of failing health, and the vacancy was filled by Rev. J. P. Dimmitt. The first services by the regular church body were conducted in the court house. In 1869, a church building was erected, under the administration of Rev. Mr. Paulson, and was dedicated the same year, by Rev. A. B. Leonard, of Leavenworth, and was the third church built in the city. The erection of a new church edifice began in 1880, which was completed and dedicated in November of that year. It is a fine, large, one-story brick building, with a capacity for comfortably seating 600 persons; 400 in the auditorium, and 200 in the gallery. The parsonage building was erected in 1871, when Rev. Allen Buckner was stationed here.

Some indebtedness had accumulated upon the congregation from the erection of the church and parsonage, but which, as early as 1877, had been fully defrayed. The present membership is about one hundred and seventy-five, and Rev. R. H. Sparks is pastor in charge.

The Catholic Church of Fort Scott dates from 1860. During this time efforts were being made by Rev. J. Schoenmakers, Rev. P. M. Ponziglione, Rev. J. Van Gach, Jesuit Fathers from Osage Mission, to establish the church, and the first priest in charge was Rev. J. F. Cunningham, who was succeeded by Father Bononcini.

About thirteen acres of ground came into the possession of the church. Five acres on the edge of the city limits were donated by the Town Company, and five acres outside of the city limits, adjoining this tract, were donated by W. Gallagher, from whom three acres more were purchased at a nominal price by Father Schoenmakers, and upon which is an excellent stone quarry from which the material for the stone work of the building was taken. A church was built in 1864, under the direction of Father Bononcini and O'Donnell, a lay brother. Alongside of the church a building was erected for a school.

The building of a new church began in 1870, and was completed in 1872. The house was dedicated June 16, 1872, by Rev. Bishop Fink, and Father Phelen, of St. Louis, preached the dedicatory sermon. The church is in a flourishing condition, as also the school, which is liberally supported.

The First Congregational Church was organized on Sunday, February 28, 1869, with twelve members. Previous to this date there had been services conducted here by preachers of this faith, at times, since 1866. The organization was effected by a council of the Congregational Churches of Lawrence, Paola, Oswego, Geneva, Mound City, and Osawatomie, and Rev. J. C. Plumb was ordained pastor. The Trustees were chosen January 12, 1869, with instructions to procure a charter for the church body.

The early services of the congregation were held in the Presbyterian Church, then in the City Hall, and in McDonald's Hall, where they continued until January, 1870, at which time they were held in the old seminary building. Two lots on the corner of Jones and Orange streets were procured in August, 1870, and a church building begun. The house was so far completed as to permit services to be conducted in the lecture room, in February, 1871, and soon following the building was completed and dedicated, August 20, 1871. The building was destroyed by fire March 14, 1872. A meeting of the trustees was held the next day and it was decided to ask assistance for the erection of a temporary house of worship. The response was prompt, general and liberal. By the close of the same day, the lumber was on the ground and with a force of between forty and fifty carpenters, whose services were donated, the building was ready for services on the following Sunday. No time was suffered to pass until efforts were put forth toward the erection of a permanent house of worship. So successful was the attempt, that a new church was built and dedicated in February, 1874. The house is a substantial brick structure, of neat and attractive appearance.

The Christian Church was formed in the fall of 1871, by the Rev. Dr. Franklin, of Cincinnati, Ohio. Dr. Franklin had come on the solicitation of a few parties for the special purpose of organizing the congregation. With the first organization there were only about ten of a membership which has since increased to fifty. Soon after the formation of the church body, Rev. R. E. Swartz was employed as the regular pastor, and was succeeded by Rev. M. N. Parker, who in time was succeeded by Rev. B. H. Smith, the present pastor.

There were services by this denomination at the place, prior to the rebellion, and an organization was effected at that time, but the commotion engendered by the civil strife had the effect to entirely break up the congregation. Following this no services were held here by this denomination until in 1871, at which time the re-organization took place.

The first services were held in McDonald's Hall and then in the court house, until the erection of a church edifice. The church building was erected in the fall of 1882, and is a neat frame structure of the Swiss gothic style of architecture. The house is thirty-five feet wide by sixty feet in length, and has a capacity for seating 400 persons. The building was erected at a cost of $3,500.

The First Baptist Church of Fort Scott was organized February 18, 1866. This formation, however, was not in accordance with the statute made for the regulation of such bodies, as was afterward discovered. For some time the church body continued to transact business in this imperfect state, a deed of the lots for church purposes was made to the trustees, October 10, 1866. Subsequently the defect in the organization was discovered, which showed all acts and proceedings of the church to be illegal, for want of conformity to the laws of the State. To remedy the matter and to maintain the rights of the body, an act was passed by the Legislature, approved March 2, 1869, by which all acts and proceedings of the church were legalized, and declared it re-organized December 15, 1868, in accordance with the charter filed with the Secretary of State without surrendering any of its corporate rights or the relinquishment or abandonment of any of its property, real or personal. The deed made by the Town Company to the trustees, October 10, 1866, was legalized and made to vest perfect title to the property conveyed, in the First Baptist Church, as the legal grantee. The first Deacons were David Gardner and N. C. Hood, and J. Harris, pastor. The first services were conducted in the old stone school house for about a year, and after the completion of the court house, were conducted in that building. The church building was erected in 1870, at a cost of about $10,000, and is a commodious stone structure, having a capacity for seating 600 persons. After the erection of the church, the congregation was burdened with a debt of about $5,000, which was mostly in the hands of the church edifice fund of the denomination, and at low rates of interests. The following is a list of the pastors of the church since its organization, namely: J. Harris, J. R. Baldwin, J. C. Post, Rev. Moon, Charles Whiting, G. W. Greene, J. M. Garrison, A. M. Averill and E. Gunn, who resigned the charge in September, 1882, since when the church has remained without a regular pastor. The present membership of the congregation is 150.

The Wesleyan Methodists have an organization of which Rev. Mr. Fisk is now pastor. The church building, a small stone, was erected in 1878.

There are also three church organizations among the colored people of the city. These are the First African Methodist Episcopal Church, the First African Baptist and the Second African Baptist. Each of these is supplied with a comfortable church edifice.

NATIONAL CEMETERY.

About one and a half miles from the heart of the city is the National Burying Ground,

Where sleep the brave,
In soil their blood made free.

These grounds were established as a cemetery by the Government, November 15, 1862. It is rectangular in shape, 924 feet long extending east and west, and 478 wide, north and south, and comprises a little over ten acres. A part of the ground was donated by the city, a part by the Presbyterian Church body which they had secured for cemetery gounds. The rest was purchased by the government for which they paid $75. The whole is enclosed by a neat and solid stone wall, through which entrance is made by means of iron folding gates swinging from stone pillars, at either end of the cemetery. The surface of the ground is a graceful slope. The crest of the slope is at the east end and for a short distance the descent is extremely light, but soon becomes of greater fall, extending about half the length of the grounds, and again becomes more mild reaching to the other extremity of the place. The main entrance is in the center of the west wall at the foot of the grade. A wide driveway passes up the gentle slope in the center of the cemetery, and at about half the length of the grounds divides, branching to either side around the more abrupt slope to the summit, enclosing a heart shaped plat, tastefully ornamented with shade trees. At regular intervals upon the margins of this plat four mounted cannon are stationed to guard, as it were, these holy and sacred precincts. Upon the summit of the grade, at the east end of the grounds and near one corner, is the tasty two-story brick residence of the Superintendent, back of which in the corner are the stable and outhouses, which are shut in by a neatly trimmed Osage orange hedge, extending from the corner of the residence building to the outer wall of the cemetery. Farther along from these buildings and toward the other corner of the grounds and also upon the crest, is the speaker's platform, which was erected in the fall of 1882. This rostrum is 37 feet long by 22 feet wide and of handsome design. A brick wall of these dimensions is built, with paneled sides, to the height of five feet. The enclosure is filled with earth to the top of the wall and covered with a blue grass sod, which constitutes the floor of the platform. Four brick pillars, 12 feet high, are built upon the side walls, and upon these pillars rests a heavy frame of carpenter work, tastefully ornamented with moulding and other artistic mechanism. Upon this frame rests a row of cross ties over which is a festoon of clambering vines. The platform is approached by stone steps of full width at both ends of the rostrum. On each side of the structure is an iron railing extending from the foot of the steps at one end, along the side of the rostrum and to the foot of the steps at the other end. Immediately upon the brow of the crest at about equal angular distances from the residence building and the rostrum, rising out of a large, grass covered mound, is the tall flag staff, upon the summit of which the national emblem mournfully keeps untiring watch over the resting place of its defenders. At the other end of the cemetery and about half its length, separated by the central driveway and surrounded by a driveway on the remaining three sides, are the two rectangular plats or pannels occupied by the interments. These plats of equal size are of even and moderate grade. Here, side by side, in rank and file, like as in solid phalanx they marched, the veterans lie buried.

The surface of these plats is smooth and even, with no perceptible marks of the graves except the little block of marble standing at the head of each. The entire grounds excepting the drives, is covered with a blue grass sod, and the whole is underdrained with tiling, by which the surface is always kept dry. The enclosure is also adorned with a profusion of artistically arranged shade trees, while the burying plats are embellished with numerous evergreens, through whose dark green foliage may be seen the ghostlike whiteness of the marble blocks, giving the whole a weird-like and mournful appearance. There are 557 interments in the cemetery, about 100 of whom are unknown. At different places among the graves are verses of poetry appropriate to the place, printed in enduring letters, on tablets such as,

"Your own proud land's heroic soil
Must be your fitter grave,
She claims from war his richest spoil—
The ashes of the brave."

And,

"On fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards with solemn round

and so on.

The cemetery is reached from the city by a magnificent macadamized drive, alongside of which is a walk, and on either side of both a row of shade trees. This improvement was made during the year of 1882, at a cost of about $18,000. The cemetry is under the superintendence of Captain J. A. Commerford, who served in the war of the rebellion as Captain of the Third Massachusetts Cavalry, Company B. His appointment as superintendent of the cemetery was made April 15, 1881.

Besides this national burying ground there are three other cemeteries belonging to the people of Fort Scott. These are the Evergreen Cemetery, situated one and a half miles south of the city; the Hebrew Cemetery, near the same place, and the Catholic Cemetery two miles west of the city.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper published at Fort Scott, and the first in Bourbon County, was that published in 1855, called the Southern Kansas. It was Democratic in politics, and was edited by a man named Kelley.

The publication of the Fort Scott Democrat was begun in the winter of 1857-58, by J. E. Jones, which he sold to E. K. Smith July 14, 1859. Smith established the Western Volunteer in the spring of 1862, which, in a few months afterward, was enlarged, and the name changed to that of the Fort Scott Bulletin. Soon after this the paper was sold to Charles Hayward, and was consolidated with the Monitor in 1863.

The Monitor was established at Marmaton by D. B. Emmert July 15, 1862. In August, 1863, it was taken to Fort Scott and consolidated with the Bulletin, the name becoming the Union Monitor, published by Emmert & Hayward, D. B. Emmert, editor. In the fall of 1864, Hayward withdrew and Emmert became sole proprietor. The first issue of the Daily Monitor was made May 16, 1864, but which, after about eighteen months, was suspended. J. P. Taylor, for a part of this time, was interested in the paper. In 1865, the paper was owned by John Scott, who, on March 8, 1866, sold out to W. A. Cormany and Oscar Edwards, and Emmert was editor up to the fall of this year, at which time he was succeeded by W. C. Webb. From the time of the withdrawal of Webb, and until the spring of 1867, the editorial chair was filled respectively by Emmert, A. Danford, and W. J. Bawden. Following this, S. A. Manlove became editor. During the latter part of 1867, J. W. Harris became interested in the proprietorship of the paper. Cormany sold his interest to Col. Hawley, in October, 1868, who, in a short time, sold out to the other members of the firm. In 1869, it was purchased by G. A. Crawford, by whom it was enlarged, and the large three-story brick building erected in which the paper has since been published. A job office and book bindery were also added at this time. When the railroad was built to Fort Scott, the daily, which had been suspended, was revived, and the Associated Press dispatches secured.

The paper was admitted to the Associated Press, August 4, 1869, and in November following the revival of the daily took place. D. W. Wilder became the editor of the sheet January 1, 1871, which position he held for some time. In October, 1873, B. J. Waters and W. C. Douthett bought the paper, and in July of the next year, Flannery & Tice became members of the firm, from which Waters retired in 1875, and in about the same time Douthett sold out to J. B. Campbell, and in about a year re-purchased the interest. In September, 1876, the paper was bought by D. T. Elson and G. F. Darrow, who conducted it during the Presidential campaign of that year. T. H. Anable purchased the establishment January 7, 1877. Anable was connected with the M. R., Ft. S. & G. R. R., to which he became indebted, and becoming financially embarrassed and unable to satisfy his creditors, the railroad company, to secure their debt, was forced to take the office and paper. This change was made November 1, 1878, and G. H. Nettleton took charge of the establishment for the company. The paper was edited by Leslie Winter, and W. C. Perry was business manager. On August 1, 1880, J. H. Rice purchased the concern from the railroad company, the paper, material, good will, subscription list and telegraphic franchise passing into his hands. He has since associated with him his three sons, N. M., R. P. and H. V., the firm being John H. Rice & Sons. Under the able management of this firm, the popularity of the paper has advanced, and the circulation of the weekly issue increased from 700 at the time of purchase, to 2,000 copies, and of the daily, from about the same number as the weekly to the present number of 1,070. The daily is an eight-column folio, and the weekly a six-column quarto, both issues being live and spirited.

The book bindery has been greatly enlarged, and is furnished with two ruling machines, one of which, a Hickock striker, has recently been added, costing $450, also a large lot of various other material has lately been added. All kinds of publication and blank-book binding are substantially and elegantly executed, upon which a force of seven experienced workmen are employed. A job office is also run, in which all kinds of job work is done, requiring a force of nine men. Four presses are used. These are, a Potter Cylinder Power; a No. 7 Campbell Pony; a Cincinnati Nonpareil; and a one-half medium Gordon press. The machinery is run by steam power, which is soon to be replaced by a No. 5 Eysters' Water Motor.

The building used is a large brick, 25x110 feet, three stories high, including the basement. The basement story is occupied by the newspaper work, the first or ground floor by the office and job room, and the entire upper story by the book bindery.

The operation of the entire concern requires the employment of a force of thirty men.

The Fort Scott Press, a Democratic paper, was started in 1866 by Hayward Brothers, who sold out to Warner & Winter.

After the completion of the railroad to Girard, Crawford County, the paper was taken to that place.

The Fort Scott Evening Post was established in 1869, by E. Schiller, which he sold to W. Coffrey in the early part of 1870. It was first issued as a tri-weekly paper and then as a daily, having been admitted to the Associated Press. Soon after coming into the hands of Coffrey, the name became that of the Fort Scott Telegram, and was discontinued in the year following.

The Fort Scott Democrat was established in 1870, by the Goode Brothers. It was sold August 21, 1873, to J. W. Allen and W. F. Sargent, and the name of the sheet was changed to the Pioneer. Sargent became sole proprietor June 1, 1874. In the following December the office was burned and all consumed except the subscription and account books. This misfortune, however, did not discontinue the paper. In February, 1875, it was consolidated with the Border Sentinel, a paper that had been brought from Linn County by N. G. Barter during the previous year. The name of the new paper formed was the Sentinel and Pioneer. September 1, 1875, the firm became Sargent & Larkin, Barter having sold his interest to W. K. Larkin, and the paper was published under the name of the Herald. U. F. Sargent, who from the first had been editor of the paper, also became its proprietor in March, 1877. The paper afterward came into the hands of D. E. Caldwell, and in February, 1882, it was purchased by Silas A. Day. Along with the weekly a daily issue, called the Evening Herald, was begun in June, 1882. In September of the same year, Day bought out the Republican Record which he consolidated with the Herald in a weekly edition called the Herald and Record, of which he is now editor and proprietor.

The Little Foot Print was brought into existence in 1870, but its time on earth was short.

Edwards & Winters began the publication of the Occasional in the winter of 1870. This sheet also enjoyed but a brief existence when it "passed in its type."

The Evening Echo was a "Greeley" paper, published in 1872, by John Shorton, but which died with him whom it labored to support.

In October, 1877, John Forbes started the Bourbon County Democrat, which he sold to Caldwell in March of the next year. The paper has since been discontinued.

The Emigrants' Guide was established in 1875, by C. R. Camp, as a monthly publication, but has since been given up.

During 1875-76, J. S. Taylor published a sheet called the Rays of the Cross, in the interests of the Baptist Church. This paper preached "red-hot" doctrine, but did not long survive.

The New Century was a temperance paper started by Rev. J. Paulson in January, 1877, but has since suspended publication.

A paper called the Colored Citizen was started October 1, 1877, by Eagleson Brothers (colored men). It was suspended for a time, and again revived in March, 1878, and during the summer was taken to Topeka.

The Banner was established in October, 1882, by Joseph B. Chapman. The sheet is a five-column quarto in size, and is strongly Democratic in political sentiment. Although the paper was established but recently, it enjoys the encouragement of a liberal patronage.

BUSINESS INTERESTS AND MANUFACTURES.

First National Bank of Fort Scott.—This bank was organized January 10, 1871. Its officers were B. P. McDonald, President; C. F. Drake, Vice President; L. C. Nelson, Cashier; C. H. Osbun, Assistant Cashier. Its capital stock was $50,000. In 1873, the capital stock was increased to $100,000, but a few years later it was reduced to the original sum. The present paid up capital and surplus is $75,000, and the authorized capital is $300,000.

The present Board of Directors is as follows: W. Chenault, F. L. Underwood, John Glunz, C. H. Osbun, J. Chenault and Samuel B. Clark.

The present officers are: W. Chenault, President; John Gluntz, Vice President; C. H. Osbun, Cashier, and J. Chenault, Assistant Cashier.

Prior to the organization of the First National Bank, B. P. McDonald had been engaged in private banking, having commenced in 1859, under the firm of A. McDonald & Brother. After a period of a few years, B. P. McDonald became sole proprietor of and continued the business until the organization of the First National Bank.

Planing Mill started in the fall of 1876, by S. S. Peterson and J. H. Gardner. The concern was begun as a sash and door factory, and the light machinery used was run by tread power. As the business gradually increased other machinery was added and horse power was employed. In 1880, a four-horse power engine was procured, and in about eighteen months following a ten-horse engine was put in. Several machines are employed, and all sorts of job wood work is done. The principal business is the manufacture of sash, doors, blinds, stair railings, mouldings, etc. About 10,000 feet of lumber is consumed monthly, and employment given to a force of eight workmen.

The Fort Scott Brewery was started in 1865, by a A. Butler, in the manufacture of beer, but which, under the temperance laws of the State, was forced to suspend operations. A part of the establishment is used by C. Herring in the manufacture of soda and mineral waters. This enterprise was begun in 1880, and at present make about three hundred gallons of these waters per day.

The Acorn Flour Mills were started in January, 1882, by D. W. and R. L. Milligan. The mill building is a two story frame. Four run of stone are employed, with a capacity for grinding 150 bushels of wheat and 200 of corn per day. The machinery of the mill is run by a forty-horse power engine.

The City Brewery was established in 1869, by F. Schultz and C. Smith. It was first started on a small scale, and was gradually enlarged to a capacity for the manufacture of 5,000 barrels of beer per year. The prohibitory law taking effect compelled a suspension of the business, and the buildings representing large investments by the owner are comparatively valueless, on account of not being allowed to be run in the business for which they were constructed.

The Fort Scott Woolen Mills were established in the spring of 1873 by A. Polegrove & Son. The object of the mills is the manufacture of hosiery. At first it was begun in a small way, and during the first year only twenty-five pair of hose were made. The increase and enlargement of the establishment has been remarkable, showing the demand for work of this kind. This year there was manufactured 4,000 dozen pair of hose, of men, women and children's wear. At first only one knitting machine was employed, now there are fourteen. The mill works consist of one set of twenty-four inch machinery besides the knitters, and is run by a combination of steam and wind-mill power. The building is a one-story stone, eighty-seven feet long by thirty-six wide, with engine house, knitting apartments and other outbuildings, and was erected in the fall of 1879. Besides the supply of a large trade in Kansas, there is a pressing demand for the goods manufactured, in Denver, Leadville, and other cities in Colorado—and the orders are far ahead of the capacity to supply. The production amounts to about twenty dozen pair of hose per day, requiring a force of twenty-two hands. The design is to speedily enlarge the factory not only to equal the already large demand but to satisfy a further extended trade.

Castor Oil Mill.—The manufacture of castor oil was begun by H. Mahew & Son (colored) in 1873. A horse-power press is used and the manufacture of oil amounts to about eighty gallons per day, for which a market is found in Kansas City, St. Louis and Texas.

The Excelsior Mills, for the manufacture of flour, were started in June, 1871, by E. A. Deland and F. C. Bacon. It was the intention of the firm to establish a foundry, and for this purpose most of the machinery was purchased. The idea was abandoned before anything further was done, and the idea of building a flour mill conceived. Work upon this enterprise was at once begun, and before the end of 1871, a large mill was completed, at a cost of about $40,000. The main building is three and a half stories high, 40 by 36 feet, with an engine house 24 by 36 feet, and an office 16 by 20 feet. The machinery is of the most approved patterns, and complete in every detail, and is run by a forty-horse power engine. The mill has a capacity for the manufacture of about three hundred barrels of flour per day, for which a market is found in Kansas, Texas, Colorado and other points.

Pioneer Wagon Manufactory was established in 1862, by J. A. Bryant. This establishment is operated in the manufacture of the "Bryant" wagon, and enjoys a large and prosperous business.

The Fort Scott Foundry and Machine Shops began operations in the fall of 1869—George A. Crawford, proprietor, who carried on the business until 1874. Mr. Frank J. Nutz became Superintendent in 1871, and one of the proprietors in 1874; Charles F. Drake became proprietor in June, 1875, Mr. Nutz remaining as Superintendent since that time. The establishment now employs about one hundred men, and manufactures boilers, engines and improved machinery of all kinds.

The Goodlander Flouring Mill was built by C. W. Goodlander in 1872, its capacity then being about one hundred and twenty-five barrels per day. It was run under the firm name of Goodlander, Currie & Co. for about three years, and then by Mr. Goodlander alone until the explosion in January, 1876. The mill then passed into the possession of the First National Bank. It is now run by the Goodlander Mill & Flouring Co., which was organized in 1880.

The Foundry and Sickle Factory was started by John E. Petty with one assistant in 1880. They manufacture ploughs, sickles, sickle-grinders, harrows, scrapers, spring wagons, cultivators, shovels, single-trees, neck yokes, shovel ploughs, the "Little Monarch" sickle grinder, and have a foundry connected with the manufactory where they do all kinds of light casting. They give employment to sixteen men, the business having now increased to seven times what it was originally.

The Fort Scott Nursery was started by Shinn & Sons, one mile north of Fort Scott in the fall of 1867, in a very small way. They now do a business of about $30,000 per annum in nursery stock sales, and their fruit sales amount to from $5,000 to $10,000 yearly. They have 270 acres of ground, most of it being in nursery stock and orchard. They ordinarily give employment to about 30 hands, and during packing season employ about 50. Sales principally in Missouri and Texas. They ship most of their apples to Texas. At the fair at Lawrence two years ago, they took three premiums—taking the third prize for orchard produce.

The York Nursery Company, with home nursery at Fort Scott, and branches at Denton, Texas, and Parsons, Kan., keep a full line of all kinds of nursery stock adapted to the new West. The officers of the company are: J. H. York, President; G. C. Kennedy, Secretary; U. B. Pearsall, Treasurer, and J. F. Willett, General Manager.

Besides the manufactories already mentioned, there are several others of lesser magnitude and importance, yet which in their way contribute to the wealth and influence of Fort Scott as a manufacturing city. These are a baking powder, broom, brick, candy, cracker and tobacco manufactory.

WATER AND GAS WORKS.

The Fort Scott Water Company became organized and incorporated June 5, 1882. The enterprise was carried out by P. B. Perkins, of Geneseo, Ill., who succeeded in entering into contract with the city of Fort Scott, whereby upon certain terms and conditions he was to supply the city with water. A company called the Fort Scott Water Company was then formed among a number of the citizens of the city. The number of directors is seven, and the term of the existence of the corporation is ninety-nine years.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors held April 7, 1882, C. F. Drake was elected President; B. E. Langdon, Vice President; F. N. Manlove, Secretary; Charles Nelson, Treasurer, and P. B. Perkins, Engineer. The capital stock of the corporation is $100,000, divided into 1,000 shares of $100 each.

The rights, franchise and contract held by Perkins from the city, were purchased by the company, for which they paid $23,399, by which the company became entitled to and possessed of all and every the powers, rights, privileges and franchises owned and possessed by Perkins relative to the construction and operation of water works for the city and as stipulated in Ordinance 370 of the City Ordinances of Fort Scott, for the construction of the works, the company issued of its bonds to the amount of $50,000.

The Perkins' system of water works is used. This system operates upon the gravity principle by means of an elevated reservoir and tower. The earth reservoir having a storage capacity of two million gallons of water, is constructed upon an elevation of about seventy-five feet above the city, by which water can be raised at least twenty feet above the highest building. A tower of masonry is built to an altitude of fifty feet above the earth reservoir, making it about 115 feet above the city. Upon this tower is a large iron reservoir, from which, by the gravity pressure, four streams can be raised to the height of eighty or ninety feet. This is what is termed the fire pressure and is so combined with the main pipes leading from the reservoir, by valves, that the additional pressure can be applied to the entire pipe distribution in less than one minute, in case of fire. The pumping machinery consists of two sets of the Perkins and Smith and Vaile & Co. pumping engines, having a capacity and capability for elevating 1,500,000 gallons of water each day to a height of 185 feet. The water supply is taken from the Marmaton River from a well sunk down beneath the sand and gravel in the bed, and extending entirely across the stream. This well is walled up with masonry and covered with sand, gravel, etc., by means of which water is accumulated and perfect filterage is secured.

The pumping house is of stone masonry and has a brick smoke stack fifty feet high. A residence near the reservoir is also constructed for the engineer, and is a stone structure containing six rooms. About eight and three-quarter miles of distributing pipe are already laid leading to all parts of the city, and about $86,000 have already been expended upon the construction of the works.

The Fort Scott Gas Works were built in 1871—finished October 8—by Mr. Buckner, J. H. Ambrose, now of Jefferson City, and Charles Boyle, now residing near Fort Benton. The works then used one bench of three retorts, and one furnace, making from 10,000 to 15,000 feet of gas per day. Their present capacity is 40,000 to 50,000 feet per day—three benches. Cost about $45,000. Mr. Buckner died a few weeks after the works were opened, but his widow retained his interest, Mr. Peak becoming President of the Company at the death of Mr. Buckner. Soon after the construction of the works, they were bonded for $25,000—J. M. Nelson of Boonville, Mo., getting possession of the bonds, and at their maturity, about five years later, of the works themselves. In the fall of 1877, he leased the works to J. W. Pinkston, and January 1, 1882, L. K. Schofield bought the lease of Pinkston and leased the works from Nelson for six years, with contract for purchasing.

The Fort Scott Driving Association—The objects for which this corporation was organized were the improvement of the breed and the development of horses, through the promotion of the interests of the American trotting turf; the prevention and punishment of frauds thereon, and uniformity in the government of trotting and pacing, also the maintenance of a park and a club for social enjoyment. The association was organized December 14, 1881, authorized capital $5,000—$1,000 paid in. The incorporators were O. A. Cheney, N. C. Perry, C. H. Osburn, W. H. Robertson, H. G. Herrick and C. H. Morley.

While milking that evening, after the battle of Osawatomie, he was addressed by John Brown, who approached from the woods, and on learning that his comrades were killed, went to a neighbor's and rested, and then went on to Lawrence. In 1858, as Mr. Anthony relates, he had met with an accident and was obliged to go to town; so a neighbor yoked up the oxen and drove him to Osawatomie; when they drove up to the post office, a lady met him whom he at once recognized as Miss Luther, a young lady to whom he was engaged. While there he married, remaining four years; he then went to Canada, where for ten years he carried on a profitable cabinet shop, but was burned out, and in 1856 went to Chicago; while there he worked at the gunsmith business, leaving in 1857 for Kansas, being one of sixteen men sent out by the land association to select a site for a town; they selected and had platted the town of Eudora, which they named after the daughter of the Indian chief from whom they purchased the land; his name was Pastor Fish. In Eudora they lived and prospered with their families, Mr. Basemann holding offices of trust while there, such as Mayor, Councilman, etc. In 1873, he sold out and moved to Fort Scott, where he went into the hotel business but broke up and went to gunsmithing. At the age of fifty, he enlisted in our late war, and underwent all the hardships and privations of a soldier's life, being wounded in the leg at the battle of Jenkins' Ferry, and was honorably discharged in 1865. He returned home and soon afterward moved to Fort Scott, where he lost his daughter Carrie, who was burned to death by the explosion of a coal oil lamp, at the age of nineteen. This misfortune caused the death of his wife a year afterward in 1877. In 1879, he married again and lives happily with his family, having three children now living—Henry, William and Louisa; he has lost four. In politics, he is a Democrat and belongs to the G. A. R.

Bryant; he was also engaged in gunsmithing at this time, but in 1881 he dropped both and took up his present business. In 1873, he married Miss Endicott, of Drywood, Bourbon Co., Kan., daughter of Gabriel Endicott, one of the early settlers of this county. They have two children—Lillie and Lulu. Mr. Basemann is a member of the I. O. O. F., and also of the G. A. R.

WILLIAM BASEMANN, gunsmith, 312 west side of the square. When his father, Henry Basemann, Sr., moved to Eudora, he had his family sent out some seven weeks afterward and with them they brought Henry. He arrived in the State in 1857, remaining at home until he was sixteen or seventeen years of age, then starting on his travels to other parts. In 1875, he came to Fort Scott and opened the gun business, having for a partner his brother Henry; they dissolved the firm in 1882, April 17; he now conducts the business alone. When the school of East Scott was burned, she moved to Shield's Building, and with Prof. Frankenburger, Miss Caldwell and Miss Hoxie, taught till the new building was completed. Settled at Lebanon, Tenn., and commenced the practice of law in September, 1865. Married Miss Belle Evans, daughter of R. J. Evans, Esq., a prominent and highly respected citizen of Lebanon, May 29, 1866. Removed to Fort Scott, April, 1871, since which time he has been actively engaged in the practice of his profession, having now a large and lucrative business. Mr. Harris stands very high as a lawyer, and is especially distinguished as an advocate. He mingles but little in politics, although he was an Elector-at-large, on the Democratic Presidential ticket in 1880.

E. J. HALL, specialist in native wood works, shop on corner Main and Burch, came to Kansas in 1870, and located at Fort Scott where his first work was done in a foundry, but on the 4th of July he took his first job on Mr. Potter's house, and then a house for Mr. Sinzc, also the Centreville Church. Being a superior mechanic, he confines himself to the finer quality of work. He has done some very fine finishing and ornamental work for many parties in Fort Scott. In 1880, he moved his shop or place of business from Locust street to his present stand; he is now finishing two parlors in black walnut for C. H. The noted massacre by the Indians of the Hall family which took place in Illinois, near where Ottawa now stands, is a matter of history. From this terrible scene his father and an uncle escaped. His experience in engineering is not unmixed with danger, as he has turned over with the engine three times, and jumped from the engine seven times; his right ankle joint being the only sound one about him. In 1861, he married Miss Shepard of Kentucky, and they have a family of three children—Minetta, Lena E., and Harry E., who has taken the premium as finest baby at the Brookfield, Mo., Fair; his brother, Clinton Hall, was killed while serving under Sherman; William J., Ezra M. and Leonard Hall are in California, while his sister, Mrs. Tucker, lives near the scene of the massacre in Illinois.

Mr. Hart married Miss Kern in 1869. They have four boys and four girls. He has received from the hands of the people an office of high trust, being elected as a Representative on the Greenback ticket in 1874. His fortune has been checkered, however, for in 1879 he lost most all he had by fire. Mr. Hart has always been an active worker in building up the public schools of the State, and is a member of the Christian Church.

In the spring of 1876, he began to deal in agricultural implements, seeds, grain, wagons, buggies, etc., under the firm name of Henry & Boyce. This partnership continued for one year. He was then alone until June, 1880, when the present firm of William R. Henry & Co., was organized, composed of W. R. Henry and W. J. Robbins. BENJAMIN F. HEPLER, M. D., was born in Pennsylvania; emigrated to Missouri in the winter of 1858, and established himself as physician and surgeon at Nevada, Mo., remaining there during the beginning of the war, the hostilities of which were the mitigating cause of his removing to Fort Scott, Kan., in 1863, and opening a drug store. In 1864, he became assistant surgeon of the Twenty-fourth Kansas State Militia, Col. Isaac Stadden commanding, which was called into active service during the Price raid. The Doctor, possessing a social, enthusiastic spirit and genial nature, was soon acknowledged a necessary acquisition in business relations. He not only assumed his professional duties, but identified himself with most of the public enterprises of the city, often receiving the seat of honor. The first feature seemed to be an educational demand, as no feasible Free School system had as yet been established; and in 1864, he, with others, organized a School Board, and eventually succeeded in maintaining literary advantages, and to-day he lives to see the public schools of Fort Scott "living monuments of honor." He has been ever since 1865 prominently connected with the various railroad interests of the State, being one of the originators, and always one of the directory of the railroad chartered as the Tebo & Neosho Railroad Company in the State of Missouri. The Nevada Times of Nevada, Mo., in one of its issues of 1869, in speaking of him in connection with this enterprise, calls him the "Headlight of the Road." In 1867, he got up a charter, and selected the charter members for the Missouri, Fort Scott & Santa Fé Railroad Company, with a view of ultimately merging the two roads into one, and to further this enterprise, a treaty was conceived and arranged with the Big and Little Osage tribes of Indians, which treaty was held in May and June of 1868, at the mouth of Drum Creek, on the Verdigris River, where the town of Independence, Montgomery County, now is; he and others connected with the directory of the two railroads, met the Secretary of the Interior with their commissioners appointed by the President of the United States, at the time and place appointed to treat with the aforesaid tribes for a body of land involving 13,000,000 acres, then known as the "Osage Indian Reservation," to secure a landed franchise to build the two roads. In October, 1869, the Tebo & Neosho directory sold their franchises to the Land Grant Railway & Trust Company of New York City, Levi G. Parsons, President, R. S. Stevens General Manager, and through whose management the road was built under the name of Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad. He was also connected with the Memphis, Topeka & Fort Scott narrow gauge Railroad, organized in 1870, and the Laclede & Fort Scott is still a director in that road, also a member of the executive committee. He holds the position at the present time of assistant surgeon of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas, and the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Gulf division, also chief surgeon of the St. Louis, Fort Scott & Wichita Railroad Company. The Bourbon County Agricultural, Horticultural and Mechanical Society, was organized in 1866, and in 1871 he was elected President of the society, and at the same time was made President of the Kansas & Missouri District Fair Association, organized in 1871. At an early day he became identified as one of the proprietors of the Fort Scott Paint and Cement Works, in the manufacturing of hydraulic cement, and in July, 1872, became general Superintendent, and sold out his interest in 1876. In 1871, he, with others, organized a Town Stock Company in Crawford County, twenty miles southwest on the line of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway, of which he was elected President, and in honor of its President they named the town "Hepler." He was one of the instigators and assisted in organizing the District Medical Society known as the Southeast Kansas District Medical Society in 1879, with G. R. Baldwin, M. D., President; F. F. Dickman, Secretary, and in 1880 he himself was elected President of this society, and in 1881 he became one of the proprietors of the Kansas Medical Index, F. F. Dickman, M. D., editor. For a series of years he did very little in a professional way, and in 1876 resumed the practice of medicine, since which time he has been very actively devoted to the interests of his profession, still holding some landed and mining interests in the suburbs of the city and adjoining counties. Thus we see in point of labor he has been one of the happy mediums through which the populace of the great State of Kansas have been able to prove by united efforts to their posterity the magnitude of advancement and improvement.

In March, he went to work again, and when the troops were withdrawn he opened a shop for himself in the same location that he now occupies, it, at that time, being an old building, which was removed when the present block was built. His business is steadily increasing, being the largest in the city in this line. In 1873, he added to his stock of paints and paper by buying of J. B. Campbell his trade in plate glass. Trade is largely increasing and profitable, having put in the following fronts: the National Bank, Boston Store, Rodecker & Co., besides decorating several other large buildings. While in Indiana, at the beginning of the war, he had organized a military company, but his mother's sickness, "which was her last," called him to her side, so he gave up the company. On leaving the State of Indiana, he traded his land there for the farm he now occupies, taking just one Section, or 640 acres, in Bourbon County, which is well known as the "Pleasant Valley Farm," which he farms and uses as a cattle ranch, handling 150 to 200 head of cattle yearly, and fine wheat and corn crops on the cultivated land, having also in reserve some eighty acres of fine timber. He was then commissioned Lieutenant Colonel, and raised a colored regiment known in military history as the Ninety-ninth Colored Infantry, but in fact the fifth regiment of colored troops raised in the country. He continued as Lieutenant Colonel of that regiment until March, 1865, but on detached service a considerable portion of the time. In the Red River campaign of 1864, he had charge of the engineers' department and of the pontoon trains. The dam built across the Red River, the one redeeming feature of that unfortunate expedition, was due to his sagacity and military genius, and George D. Robinson, June 13, 1864, mentioned his unceasing toil and devotion, and says that the final success of the dam, was largely due to his engineering skill. He was appointed to a position in the engineers' department by Gen. Canby in the summer of 1864, and had charge of constructions and repairs of fortifications on the Lower Mississippi River. He was then ordered to Fort Jefferson, Dry Tortugas, Fla., and after remaining in command there several weeks, went to Cedar Keys, Fla. He opened up a farm of 160 acres, raising fruit, grain and stock. When he first took the farm it was in its primitive state. Now the residence and other buildings are fine, the fencing good, and the railroad is almost at his door, and the city of Fort Scott less than a mile from the farm. Mr. Peirson married in New York in 1857, now has three children, who have attended the excellent schools of the city. Mr. Peirson in politics is a Republican.

He came to Leavenworth in 1860, bought an outfit, and started for Pike's Peak. He stopped at Central City, and built the five stamp mill on Clear Creek, returning to Denver in December. Then he joined the Baker expedition, going to the San Juan mines in Arizona. In order to get to the mines, they had to promise the Navajo Indians that they would confine themselves to mining, and not build houses or cultivate the land. However, some of the party violated the treaty, and they were all given ten days to leave the mines and ten of their work cattle were confiscated by the Indians. On leaving Arizona, Mr. Peterman went to Fort Union, New Mexico; this was in 1862. Martial law then being in force, he was pressed into the Union service under Gen. Candy, and served three months in the army. When he received his discharge he returned to Denver, and from there went to Central City again. Finding his claim there had been jumped, he decided to return to his native State. On arriving at Atchison, and finding that martial law was yet in force in Missouri, he went back to Leavenworth, where he hired as Government teamster and was sent to Fort Scott, from there to Fort Smith, and thence to Nashville, Tenn. He came back to Fort Scott in 1864, where he was foreman of the Government carpenter shop. In December, 1865, he was discharged and went into the furniture business. GEORGE F. POND, general agent of the Howe Sewing Machine Company, for Northern Kansas and Southern Nebraska, P. O. Godfrey, first came to Kansas in March, 1862, as a member of Company C, Third Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry. His regiment served all through the war under Maj. Gen. Blunt in Kansas. After his discharge from the army in March, 1865, Mr. Pond returned to Kansas and located on Drywood Creek, near Fort Scott, where he resided one year, and was engaged in the milling business with his brother. From here he moved to Lamar, Barton Co., Mo., where he resided six years, and was engaged in farming. From Missouri he returned to near Godfrey, Bourbon County, where he has resided since. Mr. Pond and two of his brothers enlisted at Fairwater, Fond Du Lac Co., Wis., October, 1861, in the same Company C of the Third Wisconsin Cavalry, and served until the close of the war. His eldest brother entered the service as Second Lieutenant, and was mustered out as Major of his regiment; his next eldest brother entered as a Sergeant and was mustered out as Second Lieutenant of his company. Mr. Pond himself preferred scouting duty to monotonous service of a soldier's life, which in a measure accounts for his non-promotion. He has frequently carried dispatches in company with one of his comrades from Fort Scott to Fort Gibson, without any rations or forage except what could be carried on their horses. The distance is 175 miles, and a trail went through the Indian Territory, and the journey was frequently made in three nights and two days. He participated in the battles of Montevallo, Honey Springs, Cain Hill, Lexington, Little and Big Blue, the massacre of Baxter Springs and numerous other minor engagements. Mr. Pond had the honor of capturing the notorious guerrilla, Captain Fa. Price, a nephew of the rebel Maj. Gen. Price. On the night of May 20, 1863, Mr. Pond in company with two of his comrades attacked Capt. Henry Taylor, a noted bushwhacker, who had sixty men under his command, and who was returning with nineteen Union prisoners captured by him in Kansas, to Missouri, and who had stopped on his way to rob and plunder the house of J. C. Ury, a famous Union scout. Mr. Ury and his father were taken prisoners by the rebel band. Mr. Pond and his comrades succeeded in stampeding the rebels, and in releasing all the prisoners taken by them except the father of Mr. Ury, who was slain in cold blood. For his daring deed Mr. Pond and his comrades, Elwin Weber, now a resident of Laramie, Wyoming Territory, and O. H. Carpenter, now a resident of Jasper, Mo., were publicly thanked in general orders issued by Gen. Charles W. Blair, then commanding the Union forces in Kansas. Mr. Pond first met Miss Ann Harrington, a native of Ohio, who subsequently became his wife, at Lamar, Mo. During the war, in pursuit of bushwhackers, the rebels proving too strong for him and his comrades, they were forced to take to the woods where Miss Harrington found Mr. Pond, and supplied him with provisions while he lay concealed. He was married to her on December 24, 1865, at Drywood, Mo. They have six children living—Clarissa J., Junia L., Franklin W., Herbert G., Florence May and Eugene. Mr. Pond was in the State registering office in Barton County, Mo., in 1866 and 1877, Justice of the Peace of Richland Township, Barton Co., Mo., for six years, or during the entire time he resided in the State, and was elected to this office when only twenty-one years old. He also was coroner of Barton County, Mo., for four years. He is at present, and has been for the past five years a member of the Board of School District, No. 80, Bourbon County, this State. He is a member of the W. H. Lytle Post, No. 32, G. A. R., of Fort Scott and Godfrey Lodge, No. 124, A., F. & A. M., and is at present W. M. of his lodge, and has held the same office for the past five years. He is also assistant lecturer of this fraternity for the State of Kansas. Mr. Pond was born in the court house in Libertyville, Lake Co., Ill., October 5, 1844. His parents removed when he was two years old to the Badger State, where he resided until he entered the United States army.

H. W. POND, State Agent for the Howe Sewing Machine, came to Kansas in June, 1862, with the army, and was in the service until 1865. After the war, he put up the first sawmill in Drywood Township. Bourbon County, built in the winter of 1865–66, and after operating it until the spring of 1867 he sold it to Pearsall & Peck. He then engaged in the agricultural implement business for two years, as manager for Charles F. Drake, and has since been engaged in his present business. He has the general agency for the Howe Sewing Machine in Kansas and Southwestern Missouri, and has forty-five agencies, averaging a sale of ten machines each month. He is also engaged in farming four miles south of the city, in Scott Township. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., K. of P., A. O. U. W., and Grand Army of the Republic, being Junior Vice Deputy Commander of the latter organization. Mr. Pond is a native of Hector, Tompkins Co., N. Y., born November 12, 1839. From there he removed with his parents to Wisconsin, and located in Alton Township, Fond du Lac County, which was his home until the outbreak of the war. In November, 1861, he enlisted in Company C, Third Wisconsin Cavalry, and served until the close of the war, mostly in Kansas and Missouri. He entered the service as Sergeant, and was discharged as First Lieutenant. He was married at Fort Scott, in January, 1865, to Barbara E. Ury. She was born in Martinsville, Ind., and reared at Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill. Her father, Lewis L. JOHN HOLT RICE, editor of the Fort Scott Monitor, was born November 14, 1824, in Greene County, East Tennessee. His father, David Rice, was a Virginian, and the youngest brother of Dr. John H. Rice, founder of Andover Theological College, Virginia. David Rice was a respectable Tennessee farmer, and was elected at twenty-six successive biennial elections, surveyor of Greene County, on the Federal and Whig tickets, notwithstanding Greene County on the general ticket was overwhelmingly Democratic. John Holt Rice was named after his uncle, Dr. John H. Rice. His mother's maiden name was Jane Doak. She was a daughter of Rev. Samuel Doak, founder of Washington College, Washington County, Tenn. Rev. Samuel Doak was a noted educator and Presbyterian divine. John H. Rice received his education at Tusculum College in his native county, which college at the time was under the Presidency of his uncle, Dr. Samuel W. Doak. He was a law student with Samuel M. Milligan, and was admitted to the bar in February, 1845. In May following he moved to Georgia, and located in Cassville, Cass County, practicing law until 1838. On the 1st of January, 1856, he was elected Major General of the Twelfth Division, Georgia State Militia, as the Union candidate by a majority of 1,772 over Col. E. M. Gault, ultra Southern Rights candidate. In 1855, he became editor of the Cassville Standard, and conducted it as a stanch Union paper. In 1857, he removed to Rome, Ga., and soon afterward to Atlanta, where he established Franklin Printing House, which under his direction became an extensive book publishing establishment, but which was broken up at the outbreak of the Civil War. In 1861, he was attacked by paralysis, and was confined to his bed four years. In May, 1865, he was appointed purchasing agent for the Union cavalry forces, under command of Maj. Gen. Wilson, and afterward under Brig. Gen. Croxton, to whom the command of the cavalry forces was turned over by Gen. Wilson. Gen. Rice was thus engaged until about August 1, 1865, during which time he purchased hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of forage and provisions, which he shipped to Macon, Ga., together with large quantities of corn and bacon that had belonged to the Confederate Government before it became defunct. In the fall of 1865, Gen. Rice, on account of his large family of boys, left the piney woods of Georgia, for the boundless, open prairies of the West. After remaining a few weeks in Westport, Mo., he moved to Cass County in November, and was here engaged in one of the warmest political contests ever waged, growing out of the enforcement of the "Drake Code." In 1867, he moved into Miami County, Kan., settling on a farm on Pony Creek. On the 22nd of June, 1872, he was again prostrated by paralysis, and was this time confined to his bed for two years. In the fall of 1874, finding himself permanently disabled, he moved to Paola, and on the 20th of March, 1875, purchased one-half interest in the Miami Republican, and in June, 1877, the other half. This paper was conducted by himself and his sons until July, 26, 1880, when he sold it to Leslie J. Perry, its present proprietor. Gen. Rice purchased the Republican when it was at a very low ebb of prosperity, and built it up from almost nothing to a prosperous Republican paper with a circulation of over two thousand, and sold it at a very large advance over the purchase price. Upon selling the Miami Republican in 1880, he purchased the Fort Scott Monitor, which he has since conducted. In the management of this paper he has associated with him his three sons: William M. Rice who is managing editor; R. P. Rice, business manager of job printing and book-binding, and H. V. Rice, general traveling agent. Gen. Rice became a Mason in 1849. Politically, he was always a Democrat, until the breaking out of the rebellion, casting his last Democratic vote, in 1860, for Stephen A. Douglas, for President. He was always opposed to secession, believing and teaching that that was the South's sure road to ruin. Gen. Rice has a strong and positive character, believing firmly what he believes, and defending his faith with all his strength; and is a tower of strength to the cause which he espouses. For several years during his residence in Kansas he has taken a leading part in politics, on the Republican side, and the contest just closed, terminating in the election of Hon. George W. Glick as Governor of the State, it is generally conceded that his efforts saved the Bourbon County ticket from defeat. Gen. Rice was married, December 1, 1847, to Miss Nancy Russell, a native of South Carolina. They have had ten children, six boys and four girls. Five of the boys and two of the girls are still living. His oldest child, William M. Rice, was born in December, 1848.

While Mr. Richards was there there were 100 members in the church, and in 1877 they organized a Sabbath school, having to begin with 60 scholars, and increased to 165. It has been a complete success. He married Miss A. S. Olds, July 3, 1869, of Little Prairie, Walworth Co., Wis. They were married by Rev. T. G. Colton, pastor of the Congregational Church; they have one son. Mr. Richards wants to say that the Wesleyan Church was always opposed to slavery, as it always was in favor of the equal rights of all men before the law. Also, the church is opposed to all organized "secret societies;" is in favor of the Bible in our public schools; is in favor of temperance and "prohibition." That ours is a Christian Government, and that we should recognize God, as the author of all just law, and "Jesus Christ" as King of kings, and that all men should fear God, and live holy lives.

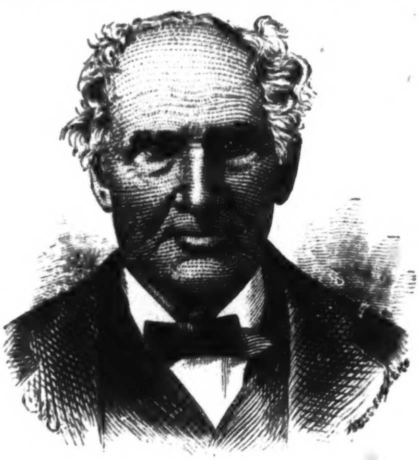
A M York

M. M. YORK was born at Towanda, Bradford Co., Penn., on the 15th day of July, 1809. He sprang from a strongly marked ancestry. His grandfather was a pioneer settler of the historic Valley of Wyoming, and fell a victim at the terrible massacre that depopulated that beautiful region. His father, then a babe, was saved by the heroism of its mother, who escaped under the cover of darkness of night, and with others descended the Susquehanna River. The child thus saved became one of the leading Presbyterian divines of Pennsylvania, and was distinguished for the vigor of his intellect and his power as a pulpit orator, and stood among the foremost in the councils of his church. His son, Miner M., was thoroughly instructed in the tenets of his father's faith, and through all the changes and vicissitudes of a long and active life has held firmly to the teachings of his reverend father. At the age of nineteen years he left the parental home to seek his fortune in the then far West. For several years he engaged in lead mining at Galena, Ill. In 1835, he removed to Rock River County, and made an entry of Government land, opposite to the present town of Byron, in Ogle Co., Ill. In 1837, he married Margery Irvine, eldest daughter of Reverend Alexander Irvine, one of the pioneers of Methodism in the new State of Illinois. They made their home on the same farm continuously until 1865, and raised a family of seven children, five sons and two daughters. In the year 1865, the entire family, with the exception of one son, Irvin, then in California, removed to Shelbina, Shelby Co., Mo. Then M. M. York and his son, Julius H., engaged in the nursery business, and remained there until the year 1870, when they removed to Fort Scott, Bourbon Co., Kan., and then and there laid the foundation of the famous York Nursery Company, which has grown into the largest enterprise of the kind west of the Mississippi River. An account of their operations appearing elsewhere in these pages, renders it superfluous to notice at length in this connection. In politics M. M. York was an ardent Whig during the existence of that party, and since the party ceased to exist, he has never attached himself to any party, but has supported men and measures upon their individual merits. In politics, as in religion, he adheres to the views and principles adopted in early life. While he has always been active in business, he has yet been a great reader. His books have been his constant companions. The subjects to which he devoted the greatest attention were ancient history, and the history and growth of the Christian religion, and in a thorough and comprehensive knowledge of both these subjects he has few equals. He is a man of positive ideas, possessed of a keen and searching intellect, and intolerant of all social, religious or political strains. As a business man, he has at all times been a model of uprightness and probity, and in all the walks of life he has made an enviable and noble record of a well-spent and useful life. His greatest ambition and interest in life have centered in his family. He rightly regards the family as a unit of society; that there the good or bad impulses are received that make the child a good or a bad citizen when grown to manhood. He is still the strong counselor and watchful father to his children, and, like one of the patriarchs of old, he is still the head of his family, deeply reverenced and beloved by them. He is now in his seventy-fourth year, still actively engaged in the nursery business, an energetic, vigorous old man, retaining in full force his mental powers and affording a marked example of the effects of an active, temperate, honest Christian life in the preservation of his mental and physical forces to a ripe old age.



M. M. York.

JULIUS HAMLIN YORK, President of the York Nursery Company, came to Fort Scott April 1, 1870, and has since been engaged in the nursery business on ground which he purchased for the purpose. He had been previously engaged in the same business in Shelbina, Mo., having been in the business now seventeen years. He is a native of Byron, Ogle County, Ill., born January 5, 1845. In 1865, he removed from there to Shelbina, Mo., which was his home until he came to Kansas. He was married at Shelbina February 15, 1870, to Frances L. Brandt, a native of Canandaigua, N. Y. They have two children—Miner M. and Carroll T. Mr. York is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

MARMATON.

There have been three town sites by this name, with a slight variation in the spelling, and two towns or villages. The first Marmaton was located on Section 33, Township 25, Range 24. A town company was organized and incorporated by the Legislature, by an act approved February 6, 1858, the incorporators named in the act being William R. Griffith, W. B. Barber, William H. Krotzer, Horatio Knowles and their associates. The town company was permitted by this act to pre-empt land not to exceed 320 acres.

A town company under the name of Marmiton was incorporated by an act of the Legislature, which act was approved February 11, 1858. This town was located on Section 31, Township 25, Range 24, about three miles west of Marmaton. The incorporators named in statute were: T. R. Roberts, James E. Jones, Orlando Darling, Charles Dimon and their associates and successors. This spelling of the name Marmiton is found frequently in the county records, and was the favorite method of spelling it with James E. Jones, a somewhat noted editor of those days. The town site consisted of 320 acres. The first building erected on it was for a store by the town company, and the second building was built also by the town company for a hotel. It was a large three-story frame structure now standing near the railroad station of Marmaton on the St. Louis, Ft. Scott & Wichita Railroad. The first general store was opened at Marmiton by Horatio Knowles, in 1858. The firm became Aiken & Knowles during the year, and in 1859, Edward Jones opened a store. The first blacksmith was W. W. Burns, who started his shop in 1858. The first school was taught by Miss Frances Barrett. Horatio Knowles built the first dwelling house on the town site in 1858. During the winter of 1858–59, about twelve other buildings were erected, and by 1860, the town contained a population of seventy-five persons. In 1860 or 1861, a flouring mill was built within the limits of the town site. In 1862, the town probably reached its greatest prosperity, at which time it contained a cabinet shop, two blacksmith shops, a furniture store, and a three-story store building containing $14,000 worth of goods.

The town was sacked and burned by rebels October 22, 1864, during the time of the Price raid, but not by Price's men. These raiders were from Newton County, Mo., about eighty in number and under command of Maj. Courcey. At this time there were burned two stores, one dwelling house and the Methodist Church. The store building of Cobb & Jones, valued at $1,500, was consumed, together with $13.500 worth of goods. The store building of Aiken & Knowles, worth $1,500, containing $15,000 worth of goods, was also burned. The house burned belonged to Mrs. Shane, widow of a Union Lieutenant of the Tenth Kansas Regiment. It was worth $500, and the church $800, making a total loss of property amounting to $32,800.

Ten citizens of Marmiton were taken prisoners by the rebels, marched out about one-half a mile, arranged in a row and fired upon. Six were killed, the rest escaping by running to the woods. The killed were Horatio Knowles, Joseph Stout, Daniel M. Brown, Abner McGonigal, Dr. L. M. Shadwick, and Warren Hawkins. Abner McGonigal was a mere boy, Mr. Hawkins sixty years old, and Mr. Brown was Postmaster at the time. The murder of these men was utterly ruthless and inexcusable, except it can be excused on the ground that they favored the Union cause, and had it occurred in time of peace, instead of in time of war, when human life is considered of little value, this Marmiton massacre would have been considered as equally atrocious and would have caused as great a sensation as did that of the Marais des Cygnes. Some of the survivors who had not before known fear, were so affected by its atrocity that now, even after the lapse of eighteen years, they have not recovered from the shock.

In 1882, after the building of the St. Louis, Ft. Scott & Wichita railroad, which passed about three-fourths of a mile north of Marmiton, it was abandoned, the buildings being moved to the railroad. The buildings moved consisted of the hotel, two stores, four dwellings and schoolhouse. The new town site consists of thirty-four acres, and was platted and filed November 18, 1882, by Francis Tiernan, President of the railroad. Edward Jones is Postmaster, having served in that capacity continuously since his first appointment in 1857, at Marmiton, except about a year, during which time the office was filled by Daniel M. Brown. In the spring of 1882, by petition of the citizens, the spelling of the name was changed back to the original spelling, Marmaton. At the present time this town contains about twenty-five inhabitants.

With his family he came to Kansas in 1866, and bought the farm on which his widow and younger children now reside; was a consistant member of the Mount Orum Baptist Church, taking an active part in religious, social and political matters of the State. Engaged while in Kansas in stock raising and farming, during which time he held numerous minor offices, and in 1876 was elected to the State Senate for a term of four years as a Republican, which colors he always bore, serving one term, closing a life of noble deeds and usefulness August 14, 1879, leaving his wife and family, consisting of seven sons and two daughters, a competency as the result of his own efforts. The eldest son, Dr. U. M. Griffin, is now a practicing physician of note in Girard, Kan., while the second and third sons, D. B. and L. W., are now in college studying for the profession. The older daughter, Lizzie F., is known as one of Bourbon County's educators. The younger daughter and sons are with Mrs. Griffin on the farm, which consists of 320 acres well stocked and improved.

J. S. JUDD, farmer, Section 30, is a native of Grant County, Wis., born in 1837. He was raised on a farm, and after trying the agricultural line, he entered a mercantile establishment, soon buying an interest in the business. When the war broke out, he enlisted in the Ninty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, Company I, and served as First Lieutenant. In 1864, we find him in the Thirty-seventh Illinois, in command of Fort Montgomery, at Brownsville, Texas. He was mustered out in 1865. Returning to Illinois, he located at Whitehall, where he had gone in 1858, going into the mercantile line. He continued at this till 1875, when he went to work as excursion agent, on the M. K. & T. R. R., and afterward over the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Gulf R. R. In 1881, he located on his present home farm, where he has improved and developed the natural resources of the land, solving in most satisfactory manner the question of "tame grasses in Kansas." He has married twice, once in 1858, and the last time in 1870. His first wife was the daughter of William McColtish, the last the daughter of Dr. Culver. While in Whitehall he was Mayor of the city, and did good temperance work there. His family attend the M. E. Church. Mr. Judd in politics is a Republican.

J. R. McBAY, farmer, Postmaster of Redfield is a native of Dauphin County, Penn., was born in 1819, and remained in Pennsylvania until 1856, when he went to Illinois, and came from Illinois to Kansas. In the year 1868, he was in Linn County a few days, and then located in Bourbon County, Kansas. He bought a farm on Section 27, in December, 1868. Continues farming in the same place, and in May, 1882, took charge of the post office. This office was established in 1872; was first kept by Mr. Hopkins. Mr. McBay has been married twice; has four children living and three deceased.

I. N. MILLS, farmer, Section 5, is a native of Alaska County, Ky., born in 1830; his parents moved to Missouri in 1837; he was raised there, and in November 11, 1854, he came to Kansas in company with James Arnot and located where he now lives. He is one of the earliest settlers of this section, and passed through all the early troubles comparatively unmolested; belonging to the Free State party, he was with Montgomery and others noted in the early history of this part of the State, all this time giving his attention to his farm, leaving only for four days, when every one was ordered away. Out of the 160 acres he has made 294, improving year by year until he is now the possessor of an excellent farm, that for the year 1882 is covered with abundant harvests. Mr. Mills' parents were married in 1828, living together till 1870 when his mother died, his father dying only three months afterward in 1871. Mr. Mills married in 1855; they have six boys and three girls.

JOSEPH OLIVER, farmer, is a native of Carroll County, Ind., born 1832. The first move he made he went to Cass County, and then in 1857, he loaded his wife and one child into the ox wagon and started for Kansas. On arriving at Scott he went out to where he located his claim and soon had a cabin built. During the border troubles he was engaged in running a mill for E. M. Jones, and in this mill the Free State men held their first convention, at which he was present. When the war opened, on the 24th of July, 1861, he joined the Tenth Kansas Volunteer Infantry, Company E, and under Capt. John F. Broadhead and Lieut. David Schoen, he went through the campaign in Arkansas, the heaviest engagements of which were Prairie Grove, December 7, 1862, and Van Buren, December 28, 1862; after this he was on duty at St. Louis, returning home in 1864. His farm is considered one of the best in the county; though only 160 acres, the large crops and fertile soil as well as his prolific apple orchard make it a valuable farm. In 1854 he married Miss Ramsey; they have one son and two daughters.

W. I. SMITH, farmer, is a native of Smith County, Va., born in 1828, and with his father and the rest of the family moved to Illinois, where he remained until he married. He then came to Kansas, together with B. B. Wood, in 1859, when he took a claim on Section 28 and Mr. Wood took claims on Section 21, and though Virginians by birth they were Free State men. Mr. Smith at once went to work improving and cultivating his farm, not being disturbed by the border troubles. When the war broke out, he served in the militia, and belonged to Capt. Smith's company. The first year he was on the farm, he broke twenty-three acres. About the beginning of the dry season 1860, the ground became very dry and the air very hot, so that they had to go to their houses and quit work. In the years that have followed he has prospered, and now has 320 acres, raising grain and handling stock to the amount of from 200 to 300 a year, and his corn for 1882 will average forty-five bushels to the acre. Mr. Smith has served his public friends in the Legislature of the State, being elected in 1876, and in school offices has been treasurer of his district for some thirteen years. In the Missionary Baptist Church he has been ordained Deacon. He has been married twice; by the first marriage he had eight children, and by the second, one daughter.

JOHN W. STANLEY, farmer, Section 21, is a native of New York; he was raised on a farm, and the first move he made was to Knox County, Ill., and while there he married Miss Caldwell. In 1867 he came to Kansas, buying eighty acres, giving $12.50 an acre. The first season he raised 43, bushels of wheat to the acre, and the next season a crop of corn that netted him $3,700, and the year of 1882 his corn will average 50 bushels to the acre. He is a farmer purely, not raising stock, illustrating the fact that a grain farm is a paying enterprise in Kansas. He has a family of four boys and four girls, all industrious. His son William, a lad of twelve plowed 100 acres of land this last year. Mr. Stanley has not been in public office, and in politics, he is a Republican.

T. J. TOLER, farmer, Section 18, is a native of Logan County, Ky., born in 1827. He remained on the farm till he was sixteen years of age, then learning a trade "that of carpenter." In 1855 he moved to Jasper County, Mo., where he worked at his trade, he then moved to Bourbon County and farmed with his brother, and worked at his trade also till 1864, when, with his sister and a crippled brother, he started for Kansas in a wagon, when he was waylaid and robbed by bushwhackers, but was finally helped by the Union forces, and arrived in the State and located in Bourbon County. He joined the militia in 1864, and was called out to defend the village of Marmaton, and saw the attack and also the shooting of his comrades by the enemy after they were taken prisoners. He located his farm of 160 acres, having enlarged and improved the claim until he now has 265 in cultivation, some ninety-five in a fine timber land and prairie. In 1856 he married, having five children living and two deceased. Mr. Toler has been treasurer of school district, and in faith he is a Christian Adventist.

UNIONTOWN.

This town is situated on the St. Louis, Fort Scott & Wichita Railroad in the valley of the Marmaton, fifteen miles from Fort Scott. The valley here is about two miles wide. A post office was established in 1856, about four miles north of the present site of Uniontown, William Holt being appointed Postmaster. This post office was named Turkey Creek. A few years afterward it was moved to the Marmaton Valley, about two miles east of Uniontown, and in 1862 moved to Uniontown. At this time K. C. Kirby became Postmaster, and held the office until 1865, in the spring of which year he was succeeded by L. P. Foster.

About the beginning of the year 1865, a town company was formed consisting of the following gentlemen: Aleph Goff, President; B. F. Gumm, Secretary; K. C. Kirby, W. W. Wright, George P. Eaves, John W. Wells, Robert W. Wells, Nelson Griswold, L. P. Foster, James Wright and John L. Guttry. The town company purchased twenty acres of John L. Guttry for a town site, and preparations for the building up of a town were made. The year before a store had been opened near the town site by Dr. John E. Grant and A. J. Mounce. This store was purchased in the spring of 1865 by L. P. Foster. It stood a little to the southwest of the town site. The first building on the town site was erected for a store by K. C. Kirby in 1866; the second by L. P. Foster, in 1867; the third by B. F. Gumm, in 1868; the fourth by James Patterson, in 1870. Mr. Patterson is the only one of the four now doing business in Uniontown. The first dwelling house on what was afterward the town site was built in 1863 by L. P. Foster; the second by Francis Ramsey, the third by B. F. Gumm. A hotel was built by Gumm in 1868. This has since been remodeled and improved, and is now the Howard House. The first hardware store in the town was opened in 1882 by H. A. Hill. The first physician in the vicinity was Dr. R. Anderson, who came into the township in 1866, and into Uniontown in 1867. The first lawyer was Columbus Sprague in 1878. The first school in the township was taught by William Kirby, in 1860. A schoolhouse was erected just off the town site in 1864. The present two-story frame school building was erected in 1871, and the school was graded in 1872. The house cost $2,000. The first birth was that of Mary J. Wells, January 15, 1856; the first marriage that of A. J. Fly to Miss Lydia Holt, April 27, 1856, and the first death that of Mrs. John J. Buckman, in April, 1856. The first blacksmith was John Hartman, who opened his shop in October, 1864, the next was James G. Oliver, who came in 1868.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1865. Some years afterward the organization was discontinued, and in 1882, a re-organization was effected with eight members. They have thus far used the church building erected by the Protestant Methodist Church which was organized in 1878, with forty members, by Rev. Mr. Grant, their first preacher. The church building was erected in 1880. It is a neat frame, and cost, including the furnishing and grounds, about $2,000.

The Uniontown Mill was erected in the spring of 1871 by L. P. Foster & H. Smith. After changing hands a number of times it was finally purchased by Dr. Fulton and T. B. Julian, who are conducting a successful business. The mill is two and a half stories high, contains two run of buhrs, with a capacity of 125 bushels of wheat per day. The engine is thirty-five horse power, and the whole property is valued at $7,000.

Uniontown now contains five general stores, one drug store, one hardware store, furniture and agricultural implement dealer, two blacksmiths, one wagon shop, two hotels, one lumber yard, one livery stable, and a population of about 300.

BRONSON.

This thriving town is located on the St. Louis, Fort Scott & Wichita Railroad, twenty miles west of Fort Scott. It is on gently rolling prairie and surrounded by a rich agricultural and stock-raising region. It was named in honor of Ira D. Bronson, of Fort Scott. The first settler in the town was G. H. Requa, who was followed almost immediately by J. W. Timmons. Messrs. Requa & Martin opened a store in September, 1881, making a specialty of boots and shoes. The post office was established during the same month, Mr. Requa being appointed Postmaster. The first school was taught by Miss Rose Daughters, about one-half mile east of the village. Bronson has made very rapid growth during the first year of its existence. It now contains a number of fine residences, and an ample supply of business houses, among these four general stores, three grain dealers, one grocery, one furniture and one drug store, one hotel, one blacksmith and one physician. The population is now about four hundred.

This town was the last established on the railroad between Fort Scott and Iola. It is about midway between the two cities, and the natural advantages of the location seem to insure a permanent growth.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.—MARION TOWNSHIP.

JACOB ANDERSON, farmer, Section 23, is a native of Owen County, Ind., born in 1838. He visited the State of Kansas in 1857, having an uncle, George W. Anderson, living on Turkey Creek, Bourbon County, but in 1858 he returned to Indiana. In September, 1859, he with his father and father's family came to Kansas and located on Section 23. His cousin, Mitchell Anderson, and an old friend, William Jones (both now deceased), emigrated to Kansas with him. When the war of the rebellion broke out he at once joined the army. He served in the State Militia and later in the Union army, in the Tenth Kansas Veteran Volunteer Regiment, Company C, Sixteenth Army Corps, commanded by Gen. A. J. Smith, and served until the war closed. In 1863 he married Mrs. Lydia Fly, whom he had known since childhood, being a native of the same State and county, in fact they had attended the same school together; she had come to Kansas as early as 1855, having married Mr. Fly in 1856, and his wife passed through all the troubles of those times. In 1856, they were leaving the State when a man named Russell attacked their party, but the men fired and drove them off. They returned in 1857 to their claim in this county and were visited by Montgomery and his men, whom she told she should poison, so they insisted on her tasting all the dishes first. In 1862 Mr. Fly died. Mr. Anderson has now a farm of 200 acres, raising stock and grain, his corn in 1882 averaging forty bushels and flax seven bushels to the acre. Mr. Anderson was married before but had no children; by this marriage they have seven. Their eldest daughter Laura is a teacher.

M. R. BOLINGER, farmer, Section 22, is a native of Huntingdon County, Penn., born in 1842. The family moved to Carroll County, Ill., where his father still lives. His mother died at their home there in 1860. In 1866, Mr. Bolinger married and moved to Kansas, locating on his present farm, December 20, 1866, paying $650 for his farm of 160, then unimproved. He has cultivated it and fenced it, since planted a fine orchard of apple and peach trees. He has also a good residence and outbuildings and excellent fencing, having improved the farm to the cost of $3,000. System of farming is grain and dairy farming; his corn crop is excellent and the result of his work since coming to Kansas satisfactory. He has been married twice; by the first marriage he had three boys; he then married Mrs. Flower, who had two girls; they now have eight children. Mr. Bolinger has officiated as clerk of his school district almost ever since its organization in 1874, and was elected Justice of the Peace in 1882.

J. B. BOLINGER, farmer, Section 2, is a native of Huntingdon County, Penn.; from there they moved to Carroll County, Ill., and he came to Kansas in 1864, two years before his brother M. R. At one time all of the children of the old family were in the State of Kansas, some eleven in number; he has four brothers here now. He located on Section 2, taking 160 acres, now having 240, highly improved, reporting forty bushels of corn to an acre; he is engaged in raising grain and stock. Mr. Bolinger married in 1853, and has a family of ten, two deceased, four girls and four boys living. He is a Republican in politics.

J. N. CROUCH, farmer, Section 29, is a native of Lincoln County, Mo., where his wife was also born, Miss McDowell, whom he married in 1854. In early life Mr. Crouch commenced teaching as well as farming, following these vocations while in Missouri; he was helped also by his wife, who was also a teacher. In the fall of 1857, they moved to Kansas, locating near Xenia, in Franklin Township. He, Mr. Crouch, owned two farms which he worked, retiring for awhile to the village, and at one time teaching a subscription school, but of late years he has giving up teaching, although he has not lost his interest, the educational problem, his wife now taking an active part in the school of their neighborhood being elected the last meeting to position of Secretary of the School Board. Mr. Crouch being an early settler, was in the State Militia during the war of the rebellion, and in 1875 moved to his present farm on Section 29, containing 200 acres, for stock and grain. They have a family of seven children; their daughter is now Mrs. Wells; Henry is in Texas; William Edgar is in business in Missouri; James A., is a horticulturist in California, while Charles, Claude and Jesse are at home. They are members of the Christian Church, and Mr. Crouch is a Greenbacker.

J. M. EASTWOOD, farmer and stock-raiser, Section 1, is a native of Monroe County, Ill., born 1828, learned the blacksmith's trade in his youth, spent his life until the age of thirty-two in manufacturing and repair of machinery and agricultural implements. After spending one year in roaming over Texas and other States, emigrated to Kansas and started and improved the farm known as the Walnut Hill farm, and there took his first lesson in farming, being his own instructor. The farm took its name from the accidental dropping of a walnut in the soil, when he was making garden, which grew and is now a fine tree bearing an abundance of fruit, and was the first tree on the farm; but now there are hundreds of the same kind on the place of his own planting. His first year was the starving year of 1860, but by the efforts of himself and family, they raised buckwheat enough to make bread for the family and some to spare. His first crop of wheat was raised from one half bushel of seed, obtained from Springfield, Mo., sowed in the year 1860 and harvested in 1861 with cradle and thrashed with a flail, from which he obtained sixteen bushels of good wheat. During the war he spent his time in farming, gardening and attending to stock raising, and a part in the militia service, being frequently called to shoulder his musket to help defend his home, and so his time was spent during the war. In 1865, he lost most of his cattle with Spanish fever, which gave him a little set back, and in 1874 he was bondsman for a defaulting county Treasurer, which caused the loss of a great deal of time and money and gave him financial trouble. The year 1875 he spent in traveling in California, Oregon, Washington Territory and the Western Slope, but finding nothing to suit his desires in the way of a better country, he contented himself to remain in Kansas. The year 1880 he spent in the Rocky Mountains, in Montana, for the benefit of his health; having regained his health, with renewed vigor, he returned to his old home and business, and in company with his sons is now in the stock business. They now have on the farm and in pasture between four and five hundred head of stock, which are making good returns. In 1848, he was married to Miss Pegg, of Illinois, and to them have been born eight sons and two daughters; six sons and one daughter are now living. Mr. Eastwood has been a Republican since the organization of that party, and voted and labored with that party for some years after the war, but is now a stanch Greenbacker.

M. D. ELDER, physician and surgeon, is a native of Williamson County, Ill., born in 1848. In 1862, he came to Bourbon County and moved to Uniontown in 1881. Having taken a thorough course of reading, he attended the Keokuk Medical College, and graduated in 1877. The Doctor gets his share of the practice, which is divided up among three of them. He is a man of great ability and with a promising future; "not married." He joined the Masonic lodge in 1875.

G. P. EVES, merchant and fine stock breeder, is a native of Toronto, Canada, born in 1834. His father was a physician, and it was not till G. P. was twenty years old that he tried farming. While in Illinois, he carried on a grain farm, and in 1860 came to Kansas, locating on Sections 3, 26 and 22, having a farm of 620 acres, and went to raising blooded Durhams and high-bred cattle, of which he now has fifty head. In 1861, he enlisted in the Seventh Kansas Volunteer Infantry, Company H. After eighteen months, he came home and organized a battalion for border service, and went in as a Lieutenant Colonel, serving till 1865, when he returned to his farm. He established his mercantile business in 1861, having Mr. Willey for a partner. In 1870, he was elected to the Legislature. Mr. Eves has been married twice, marrying the last time in 1864. They have no children.

C. J. FIELDER, farmer, Section 32, native of Claiborne County, Tenn., born in July, 1833. His father and family moved to Lawrence County, Ind., in 1850. He married Miss Painter in 1856, where he remained until 1859, when he came to Kansas and located on his present farm. Taking 160 acres, his claim was entered, through mistake, by a man named Deitrick Foreman, so he entered Foreman's and then changed; and Mr. Fielder prepared to open his farm, but had to sell his oxen and wagon, and bought a milk cow and an old blind mare and lumber for a house, manufactured his own plow and made lines from grape vines. This was his experience of pioneer life in Kansas. The year they came there was a Missionary Baptist Church organized, and in 1868 he was ordained a Deacon. In 1864, he served in the State Militia, and was at the battle of Westport, and then returned to agricultural pursuits. He now has a farm of 330 acres, well improved, on which, by husbandry, he has been able to establish a beautiful home. They have a family of five girls and one deceased.

C. J. HALM, M. D., of the firm of Fulton & Halm, physicians and surgeons, is a native of Luzerne County, Penn., born in 1854. His father died in England, and he was adopted by Mr. Halm, who took him to Fort Scott, Kan., and we find him clerking for Prichard Bros., Druggists, in 1869. While here he met Dr. Fulton, of Union Town, who employed him to clerk in his drug store, where he went in 1871, at the same time reading medicine, which he continued till 1875, when he took a course of lectures in the Missouri Medical College of St. Louis, where he graduated in 1877. On coming back he entered into partnership with Dr. Fulton. They also carry on a stock farm of 230 acres on the edge of town. Dr. Halm married Miss Stelle, of Uniontown. They have one child, a boy. The Doctor is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

H. A. HILL, furniture and hardware, grain and agricultural implements, is a native of Rock Island, Ill. Was born in 1846 and raised on a farm, and in 1861 he moved to Missouri, where, in 1864, he enlisted in the Forty-seventh Missouri Volunteer Infantry, Company B. He served one year; then, peace returning, he returned to his former pursuits. In 1866, he came to Kansas and located a claim near Marmaton, on Section 22, remaining till 1873, when he moved to Uniontown and worked at the trade of wagon-maker in partnership, first, with T. L. Ledbrook, then with C. S. Steele, who bought Mr. Ledbrook's interest. In 1881, he sold to Mr. Steele and established his present business. In 1868, on Christmas, he married Miss Mahler. They have three children—two boys and a girl. Mr. Hill has always taken an interest in the schools, and has served on the local school board. He belongs to the Masonic lodge, and also the A. O. U. W.

JAMES F. HOLT, farmer, Section 2, native of East Tennessee, born April 15, 1819. He was raised in Indiana, and for ten consecutive years he held offices there, having to resign when he came away. In 1852, he went to Iowa, and from there to Missouri. Coming to Kansas in 1858, he bought a claim of his brother William and had a post office established and was appointed first Postmaster in 1858, continuing for four years and six months, or until the Turkey Creek Post Office was discontinued. In 1862, Mr. Holt was elected County Judge, and was Commissioner in 1865, and has always been a delegate and regular attendant at the Democratic conventions. During the early troubles the Judge occupied neutral grounds, but, notwithstanding, he was present and saw many of the lawless proceedings that took place, and was at times in a perilous position. He has a thorough knowledge of all parties and their motives, of all the early incidents of this section. From the claim he first bought he has made a farm of 300 acres, 200 now under cultivation, rasing good crops of wheat and corn, having some of the finest cattle in the country, and keeping blooded horses and hogs. In 1840, he took his first wife, but losing her, he married again in 1850. By the first marriage he had eight children, and six by the second, having lost two. Mr. Holt was Township Treasurer for five years, and served on the School Board as Clerk, etc., since 1870. He has been Notary Public, and was one of only four Masons west of Fort Scott in 1858. He is a charter member of the lodge at Uniontown.

WILLIAM JACKMAN, farmer and Postmaster, Rockford, is a native of Pennsylvania. In early life he moved to Guernsey County, Ohio, coming from there to Kansas in 1858 and locating on the north side of the section where he now lives, and in 1859 he married Miss Mason. This was an early date for this section, and he was counted among the pioneers, enduring the privations which marked early life on the frontier of civilization. In 1861, he enlisted in the Twelfth Kansas Volunteer Infantry, Company K, and served until 1865, when he was mustered out and returned home. During the time he was away, his family lived with his wife's father, Benjamin Mason. In 1868, he lost all of his property by a prairie fire, and in 1877, he moved to the southeast quarter of Section 17, where he engaged in stock farming and conducting a store and post office. He started his store in 1879, and was appointed Postmaster in 1881. They have four children living and three dead. The family are members of the Protestant Methodist Church, organized there in 1877.

T. B. JULIAN, miller, native of Putnam County, Tenn., was born in 1843. His father, T. K. Julian, M. D., visited Fort Scott in 1854, but returned to Cassville, Barry Co., Mo. In 1855, June 5, he came to Fort Scott with his father and they went West to Mapleton, Bourbon County, and settled there, where his father still lives. In 1861, he commenced milling with Noel & Myrick, and the same year went into the army as scout, and served during the war in various capacities, as messenger and wagon-master, also enlisted as private in Company B, Third Kansas Cavalry. In the milling business he has worked for Deland & Bacon, millers, Fort Scott, and for others. In 1877, he moved from Mapleton to Fort Scott, and while there was elected Alderman of the First Ward, 1880 to 1881; he had been Under Sheriff of Labette County, and Superintendent of the Poor there. In 1881, he moved to Uniontown and bought an interest in the Uniontown Steam Flouring Mills, which he is now managing; they have three run of stone and a capacity of 120 bushels of wheat and 200 bushels of corn. The property is worth about $5,000. Mr. Julian married in 1868, Miss Nelson. They have three children. He belongs to the Masonic Lodge and the A. O. U. W.

I. D. MARKS, station agent on the St. Louis, Fort Scott & Wichita Railroad, is a native of Butler County, Ohio, born in 1849, May 16. As soon as he was of suitable age he was educated in the mercantile business, but he went to Illinois in 1865, to Arcola. It was while here he married Miss Wright in 1877, and next year commenced his railroad experience on the Illinois Midland; his first station was Chesterville, Ill. In 1881, he came West, and on April 1, 1882, took the station at Uniontown, having also the Western Union Telegraph agency. His matrimonial venture was blessed with one daughter.

G. W. OLIVER, farmer and Superintendent of the Poor, Bourbon County. He is a native of Geneva, Ontario Co., N. Y.; was born in 1832, February 28, at the foot of Seneca Lake. When eleven years of age, his father moved to La Grange, Ind., and from there they moved to St. Joe County, Mich. After four years' residence here, he went to live with his grandfather, James Goodwin, at Geneva, N. Y. In 1854, he returned to his father's farm, and then went into the machine shops at Sturgis' Ferry; from there he went to St. Joe, Ind., into an ax factory there; while in this place he married Miss Eller in 1858; next year going to Tawas, Iosco Co., Mich., where he farmed and worked at carpenter work. In 1864, he enlisted in the Marine Corps, at Portsmouth, N. H., serving in the barracks; was removed to the Brooklyn barracks, and soon joined the man-of-war vessel St. Mary's, and sailed in the coast service to Valparaiso, Chili; then to Panama, where he had the yellow fever; then to San Francisco. He was transferred to the Jamestown and went to Panama, then back, and on up the Pacific coast to Sitka, where he saw a curious land and a curious people. They touched at Vancouver's Island on their return trip to San Francisco, where he was transferred to the barracks, and discharged September 16, 1868, and sailed for home, arriving October 24, 1868, returning to the pursuits of civil life. In 1871, he came to Kansas, locating in Uniontown, and in 1872 he took charge of the Poor Farm, giving it up in 1874, and farming A. Chaffin's farm; taking charge of the County Poor Farm again in 1877, retaining possession to present time, 1882. In 1880, he bought A. Chaffin's farm of 120 acres, in Section 27, which he also farms now, in blooded cattle, horses and grain. He has four children living; has buried two since living in Kansas. During his eventful life he has been on a man-of-war forty-four months, and was away from home four years.

JAMES PATTERSON, general merchandise, is a native of Missouri, born in February, 1817, and has since commencing business always been in the mercantile line with the exception of ten or twelve years; when he was in a foundry in Alton, Ill., he carried on a mercantile enterprise in Calhoun County, Ill. Coming from Alton, Ill., to Kansas, in 1870; he has the third oldest store in Uniontown. He built the building in which he does business at a cost of $4,500; 24x60, two stories high. He now carries a stock of $5,000, and does a steadily increasing business. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, but there being none of that denomination here, he helped to build the Methodist Protestant Church, which he attends. He married in Illinois, and has five boys and three girls, all of age—George and William in the business with him; James is agent for J. T. Stalker, general store; John is a blacksmith at La Harpe, Allen County, and Elmer is in Montana, on the railroad. Both of his daughters are married, and his household consists of nine members now

D. T. RALSTON, farmer, Section 8, is a native of Lincoln County, Tenn., born in 1818, June 10, and was raised in Fayette County. When eighteen years of age he went to Greene County, Mo., where he was employed at farming and working at the carpenter's trade in the neighborhood of Springfield. In the spring of 1840, he married Miss Guttry, and moved to Kansas in 1855, whither John and James Guttry had preceded them, being the first settlers in Marion Township. On the 12th of January, 1855, he arrived, and, as was his custom, he staked out his claim from hill to hill, taking in a choice piece of 320 acres, retaining the most of it now. During this time he had some trouble to keep the squatters from his claim, and in 1856, he relates, as they were taking the body of one of his children to the grave, they were met by a company of Pro-slavery men, who demanded his horse of him, and after following them to the place of burial, possessed themselves of the horse, promising to return it, which they did afterward. In 1855, he had but few neighbors, being McCarty, Fly, Mitchell and Coyle. In 1857, he lost his wife. He remained a widower until 1859, when he married again to Miss Rhotom, of Bourbon County. He has improved his farm and now raises stock and grain on 300 acres. His family consisted of sixteen children, nine of whom are living. In 1856, Mr. Ralston was elected Justice of the Peace, but his commission was made out in another name, so he never served. He has belonged to the Masonic fraternity since 1864, and is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

C. S. STEELE, blacksmith and wagon maker, is a native of Port Byron, Cayuga Co., N. Y. Was born in 1834. Removing to Logansport, Ind., in 1848, and while in La Porte County he learned his trade. His father's family live in Indiana yet. Tracing their ancestry back to the Patriarch John Steele, who was born in Essex County, England, and came to Cambridge, Mass., in 1631, the descent is as follows: the Patriarch John Steele had married a wife in England, who died in 1653; he then married Mercy Seymour; he died at Farmington, Conn., November 25, 1655; his son, John, Jr., married Mercy Warner, and died in 1653 or 1654; his son, Lieut. John, born November 5, 1647, married Ruth Judd, of Farmington; he died in 1737, August 26; his son, Lieut. John, was born March 7, 1686, married Mary Newell, and died April 2, 1731; his son, Solomon, born November 18, 1728, married Mary Guernsey, and died 1786; his son, Job, married Olive Stoddart, and died 1818. This was Mr. Steele's grandfather, and his son, or Elisha, lived and died in Indiana. Six of the old family are in Kansas. C. S. Steele arrived in Kansas, May 15, 1860, in Fort Scott, June 16, and went to Rockford, July 12, in company with George Diamond. He then bought out Gilford & Hamlin, the pioneer blacksmiths of Rockford, and in company with M. L. Ford, worked at his trade and farmed. On the 23d of August, 1862, he enlisted in the Second Kansas Battery, serving there till September, when he was promoted to First Lieutenant of Company G, Fourteenth Kansas Volunteer Cavalry; then was commissioned Commissary, and finally received the commission of Captain in the same company. In 1865, he was mustered out and returned to his home in Rockford. In 1873, he moved to Uniontown and established his business here as blacksmith, and took possession of the wagon shop in 1881. He still has 280 acres for farming purposes, besides owning other property. Mr. Steele has ever taken a determined stand in politics, and as a reward and also to show the trust they placed in him, the people elected him to the Legislature in 1871 for the Fifty-second Representative District, on the Republican ticket. From 1879 to the present year, 1882, he has been Justice of the Peace and also Notary Public. He has held other minor offices, always found ready to serve the public for the public good. He has four daughters, and is one of the charter members of the A. O. U. W., and Recorder of the same.

D. C. STEVENS, with J. W. Brown, is a native of Albany, N. Y., born in 1851. His father was in the gents' furnishing line, so he was educated to a mercantile life. Coming West to Missouri in 1867, went to work for Pierce & Cobb, in St. Louis; coming to Kansas in 1869, he entered the store of Mr. Foster, but soon after went onto a farm and in 1879 he commenced with J. W. Brown, and is now manager of the business, which was bought of Mr. Foster by J. W. Brown in 1869, carrying a stock of $4,500. Mr. Brown is now conducting a branch store in Toronto, Woodson County, of about the same magnitude as this one.

JOAB TEAGUE, farmer, Section 14, is a native of North Carolina, born in 1812. When about fourteen years of age, he went to Indiana, and in 1837, to Missouri, and twenty years afterward came to Kansas and bought a claim of Mr. Etheridge, comprising 500 acres, for $800. The land was then not surveyed. About this time they organized a commission regulating claims, of which he was a member. He stood on neutral ground in the Free-State and Pro-slavery fight; although his feelings were those of the Free-State men, he was unmolested by the two parties, though they had his name and a list of his property. When the Governor of the State appointed Boards to settle and arrange all troubles, he was one of the members. In 1859, he was County Treasurer; Justice from 1858 to 1862, and again elected. Since, he has taken great interest in the public welfare of the State. Mr. Teague was first married in 1835, and lost his wife in 1857. Marrying again in 1863, to Miss Wood. Mr. Teague had five boys and one girl by his first wife, and three boys by his second wife. Is a successful farmer and fruit grower, taking the premium on his apples all over the world, at the Centennial in 1876, and this year, 1882, has an apple weighing twenty-one ounces and measuring fifteen and a half inches in circumference.

J. W. WELLS, farmer, Section 27, is a native of Rutherford County, N. C., where he was born in 1828. Until he was eleven years of age they lived in his native State, and in 1839 moved to Greene County, Tenn.; here they engaged in stock farming, and in 1851 he married Miss Brown. Immediately starting West he located at Cape Girardeau, Mo.; while there he was engaged in farming, and here his brother Robert married. In October 27, 1855, they came to Bourbon County and located in an almost wilderness, there being only the Guthreys and one or two other families in the section for miles. There was another family named Russel that attempted to wrest the claim from Robert Wells, coming to the unfinished cabin and entered, when the two brothers ordered them from the claim. A stone struck the eldest brother, John, when the war was opened. Neither party used arms or knives, which was fortunate, and the Wells brothers coming off victorious, the Russell party retreated. Such were the perils of pioneer life in Kansas in 1855. John Wells had at first located on Section 12, Town 25, Range 22, but in 1857 he moved to his present location, which he has improved, and now has a farm of 360 acres of fertile soil covered with heavy crops; himself and wife are the only couple of '55 now living in Marion Township; their daughter, Mary Holt, was the first child born in Marion; he belonged to the first town company.

W. F. WELLS, merchant, Uniontown, is a native of Missouri, born in 1852. His father, J. W., and his uncle Robert were pioneers in this township, coming West and settling in 1855, bringing W. F. with them. His youth was spent on a farm, and as he grew older he became quite an expert with the gun, spent his time hunting, and in the chicken season killing 120 dozen prairie chickens and eighty dozen quails; his best season in 1877 he killed 1,900 chickens; his best day's record is thirty-seven birds without a miss, having to shoot one a second time; but his younger brother David has made the best record known, killing forty-four chickens, two jack-rabbits and one plover in forty-four shots, three shots each killing a brace of chickens; he followed shooting till 1881 when he built his store and stocked it with general merchandise, at the cost of $1,800 and is now doing a good business. He married a Miss Crouch, the daughter of J. M. Crouch, one of the pioneer families; their union has been blessed with one child.

G. C. WILLEY, merchant, Uniontown, of the firm of Eves & Willey, is a native of Sullivan County, N. H., born in 1838; he first learned the business of an engineer, and also clerked, but his health failed and he went West, locating in Iowa; he tried the machine shops of Clinton. This was in 1867. Here he had an excellent offer, but his health failed again and he then came to Kansas, locating in Erie, Neosho County, in 1868; from here he traveled for Parsons & Co., Kansas City; he was a commercial agent for some years, then commencing in Uniontown in 1871, with a stock of some sixty-odd dollars, by perseverance he established himself, and in 1875 was appointed Postmaster. He was so successful that in 1881, he built and stocked a store with general merchandise; he was appointed agent for the Adams Express in the same year, and in 1882 Mr. G. P. Eves went into partnership with him. In 1861 he enlisted; in 1865 he returned to his former occupation. He has been married twice, marrying the last time Miss Annie Rousche, daughter of James R. Rousche.

ELIAS WILLIAMS, farmer, P. O. Uniontown, is a native of New Jersey, born in April, 1815; when he was four years old he moved to Ohio with his parents, and remained there till he was twenty-four, when he went to La Salle County, Ill., and began farming. While here he married Miss Lewis, of Ohio, one of the pioneer families of that section, and as for himself he was one of the pioneers of three States, Ohio, Illinois and Kansas. In 1859, he came to Kansas, locating in Johnson County, and in 1860 he came to Bourbon County, and settled on Section 14, going into stock and grain farming on a farm of 339 acres, cultivating about 150 acres. In 1840, he was married and now has six children—John, in the Chickasaw nation; Jerome, at home; Reese was in Gunnison County, Col., Fred is away, Charles is at home, and a daughter, now Mrs. Goff. Mr. Williams was Justice in 1861 and 1867 and also in Illinois; he has always taken an interest in school matters, and has held school office.

PAWNEE.

Pawnee is located in the southern part of Bourbon County, on the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad, about ten miles south of Fort Scott. It was established in 1871, by the railroad company, the site comprising ten acres. Immediately following the founding of the town, H. B. Brown and Peter Smith each began in business, dealing in general merchandise. In the winter of 1871-72, a man named Conkling put in a general store. The Godfrey Coal & Mining Company began mining operations in the vicinity, and also engaged in general merchandising in 1873. About the same time, the Laidlaw Brothers started a general store. Two years later the Fort Scott Coal & Mining Company began business, dealing in coal and merchandise. A man named Smith began the hardware business about the same time. In 1877, T. D. Harris erected a store and began the general merchandising business. T. M. Grisham bought the Fort Scott Coal Company's store, and continued the business. The Laidlaw Brothers failed in business, and the business was taken up by the Enterprise Company, which also soon closed out, the business passing into the hands of Hugh McKay. Peter Smith sold out to Ryan & Woolf, and T. D. Harris to Hibbard & Sharp. The mercantile business is at present represented by two establishments, viz.: G. W. Barton, and H. B. Brown, dealer in coal, lumber, grain, hay and general merchandise. The population of the town is about 100.

The post office was located here in 1871, H. B. Brown was appointed Postmaster, and he has since acted in that capacity. The name of the office is Pawnee Station.

A man named Harris taught the first school in the town, in the winter of 1871-72, the school being kept in the frame school house which was built in the fall of 1871. The first residence was built by Mrs. Bender, the next by D. T. Brown, and the next by H. B. Brown. A hotel building was erected in 1871, by Crawford & Botsford, who ran it for a time as a public house; it was then taken by Botsford alone, and then by L. G. Griffith, who now runs it as a hotel. The country in the vicinity of the place is finely adapted to agriculture, and the town is a considerable point in the shipping of grain, hay, live stock and produce.

HIATTVILLE.

This town was named after James M. Hiatt, who owned the land upon which the town is located. E. B. Rall was the first settler here in May, 1870. Others were Thomas Hartwell, D. R. Anderson, Jacob Dockter and William Daly. The post office was established in May, 1870, and named Pawnee. Soon afterward, the name was changed to Hiattville. E. B. Rall kept the first store in the town, opening it upon moving into the place from his farm one mile south May 1, 1870. D. R. Anderson was the second storekeeper. Shortly afterward, Jacob Dockter opened a blacksmith shop. The first child born in Hiattville was John Hartwell, in 1874. The first marriage was that of Jacob Dockter to Mrs. Queen Hamlin July 9, 1876. No death has yet occurred in the town.

Hiattville now contains two general stores, the proprietors of which buy stock, grain and all kinds of produce; one blacksmith and wagon maker; one dealer in lumber and agricultural implements, and a population of seventy-five.

The town is beautifully situated on rolling prairie, and surrounded by a fine, healthful country, well supplied with good water.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.—PAWNEE TOWNSHIP.

J. BARKER, farmer, Section 6, is a native of Indiana, born in 1836; at an early age moved to Missouri and was raised there as a farmer, living in the southern part, near the line. In 1862 he moved to Kansas, and enlisted in the Fourteenth Kansas Cavalry, and was in Arkansas during most of the campaign, being mustered out in 1865. He returned home and having bought his present farm in 1863, he at once moved onto it and commenced improving, and under his husbandry it has grown to be 270 acres of fertile land, on which we find broad stretches of corn field and numerous herds of stock. Mr. Barker has been married twice, once in 1857 to Miss King and the last time to Miss Nellie Britt; by the first marriage he had six children, and one by the last. In politics he is a Republican.

J. W. BOWLUS, farmer and stock-raiser, Section 28, is a native of Frederick County, Md. He was born March 28, 1837, and when eight years of age went to Fremont, Ohio, where he was raised and educated. In 1857, he graduated from Oberlin Commercial College, afterward farming and lumbering; then in partnership with Capt. Totten, a ship-carpenter, built a schooner for the grain trade between Chicago and Buffalo. But when the war broke out he enlisted in the three months' service, under Capt. Writter; then he was elected First Lieutenant of Company E, Twenty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. In 1861, he joined the army in West Virginia, and was stationed under Col. Milroy, at Cheat Mountain summit, which they fortified. Being surrounded by Gen. Lee's army, he describes a remarkable scout on which he was sent in order to open communication with Gen. Reynolds. With sixty picked men, in gray uniform, he proceeded to run the rebel camp, which he did by entering their camp as the picket-guard was forming, and in the dim light marched through and out by a bridle-path. When approaching a house on Becky Creek, at daylight, they were discovered by the rebels and fired at; Capt. Coon, of the Fourteenth Indiana, wanted to have an engagement; Lieut. Bowlus put his men in cover, while Capt. Coon went forward to reconnoiter. The rebels fired, shooting down the advance, consisting of a Sergeant and five men. Lieut. Bowlus advanced to the support of Capt. Coon, but the rebels advancing at the same time, the two commands were separated; Capt. Coon made for Cheat Mountain summit, while Lieut. Bowlus made for a canyon, where he kept the enemy at bay from 7 A. M. until 11 A. M. This was a remarkable engagement, for here was the lieutenant with a handful of brave men contending with the whole force of Col. John A. Washington's command, and when one of the Union Surgeons returned, who had been called by the wounded rebels who were left on the field, his escort reported eighty-three rebels killed and wounded; the dead were found buried in the canyon covered with logs and leaves. After the Lieutenant reported to Gen. Reynolds, at Huttonville, he returned to Cheat Mountain. He was shortly after sent on another successful scout after a band of guerrillas called the Dixey Boys, on Seneca Creek, where he remained until the entire band was broken up, and then joined Gen. Milroy at Monterey, and advanced with the army to McDowal. From here he was sent on a scout to Pocahontas County, Va., for the purpose of destroying a mill, the rendezvous and source of supplies of a band of guerrillas infesting that county. This expedition was successful and practically put an end to guerrilla warfare in that part of the State. It was while on this expedition that Gen. Joseph E. Johnson engaged and defeated the Union forces under Gen. Milroy, at McDowal, forcing Milroy to fall back in the direction of Franklin, leaving the country between Lieut. Bowlus and the Union forces in possession of the rebels. The rebel cavalry being informed by the natives of the Lieutenant's expedition, lost no time in finding his whereabouts. Then commenced a series of skirmishing and bushwhacking which lasted five days. By keeping the mountains and marching by bridle-paths and changing from one spur of the mountain to another, during the night, the Lieutenant finally joined the Union forces under Gen. Fremont, at Franklin, without the loss of a man. After the battle of Cross Keys he was promoted to Captain of Company C; was on the skirmish line that opened the second battle of Bull Run, and with the rear guard that covered the retreat from the field. Stationed at Fort Ellsworth, in front of Washington, that winter, laying at Stafford Court House. The spring campaign of 1863 opened with the battle of Chancellorsville. In this engagement his regiment lost out of a total of 700, nearly 500 men, and from being the seventh Captain in rank, he was left in command on the field of the handful of surviving soldiers of his regiment. Soon after he was commissioned Major, and in July following, he received his commission of Lieutenant Colonel. His health was so impaired that shortly after the battle of Gettysburg he was compelled to resign, leaving the army August 4, 1863. He then went north to the lakes; recovering somewhat his health, he returned to Fremont, Ohio, where he married Miss Anna B. Rice, and went into the mercantile line, but sold out and came to Kansas in 1866, and located on Section 28, taking 160 acres of raw prairie, from which he has produced a well-arranged farm. In 1876, he visited Nevada and California. Col. Bowlus has held offices of trust for the public and is an earnest worker and believer in the principles of the Republican party as enunciated and practiced by Abraham Lincoln. His orchards have produced fruit that can be equalled nowhere but in Kansas. They have but one child—Ella E.

They have made an excellent home out of the raw, unimproved prairie, but in 1880, Mr. Clayfield died. Since then the boys have carried on the farm. In 1878, Mr. J. G. He has one daughter by the first marriage. In 1870, he married Miss Raymond, who is a teacher, having followed the profession for twenty years, teaching in New York, Michigan, Kansas and Missouri. His father having died in Ireland in 1856, the boys supported the family, and William's experience has been varied. In 1867 we find him employed on the Burlington Railroad, and afterward on the Union Pacific. While working on this road he lived for eleven months in Utah, where his first child was born. Here he made money; then moved to Omaha. He then pre-empted a farm on the Big Blue, but abandoned it and returned to Omaha, working there for Dick Whitney. He then went to Texas and contracted on the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railroad, making money there, and then came to Kansas, December 31, 1873, and located on his present farm, where he has 320 acres of improved land. Here he handles about 100 head of cattle, from 300 to 350 head of sheep and some fifty hogs a year; reporting for 1882 a yield of forty bushels of corn to the acre on his farm. In 1866, he married, but has lost all his children but one boy—George J. Mr. Dunn is a Democrat in politics, and is a member, as is his wife, of the Catholic Church.

Phelps, the site comprising an area of forty acres. It was established under the auspices of a town company, composed of D. N. Phelps, W. R. Clybourn and T. Woodard, and was laid off by M. M. Hellman. The names of the streets are Clybourn, Woodard, Phelps, McDonald, Main and Kansas avenue.

The first house upon the site was a store house which had been brought to the place by the firm of Sweeny & Benson, in which they engaged in the sale of general merchandise, in the fall of 1874. About the same time, Keith & Henry moved a store room upon the site, in which they put a stock of general goods. During the winter, they were joined by J. M. Terry with a general store, and B. Daily with a boarding house and restaurant, and the firm of McLean & Linn also began dealing in miscellaneous merchandise. At this time it was the terminus of the railroad which was projected to run from Kansas City to Memphis, Tenn. For some time the people had little hope of the road ever being completed to its projected destination, since it remained completed only to the little town of Memphis, Kan., for several months. During this time the immense coal fields in the vicinity were developed, and this became important as a coal shipping point.

It was a question with the town company what the name of the village should be. After the proposal of sundry names, none of which were chosen, they concluded, from the dearth of hope that the railroad would ever be brought to its destination, at Memphis, Tenn., that, if the railroad could not be taken to Memphis, they would bring Memphis to the railroad. They accordingly named the terminus Memphis. The building of the road was again taken up, and is fast approaching the projected point, which will soon demand a change of the name of this station.

The town, being the terminus of the road for so long a time, and the development of the coal interests, caused it to spring up with great rapidity, so that, at one time, it was considerable of a business point, and contained a population of about 350. After the extension of the road was begun, the town began to go backward. It now contains a population of about 100, six general stores, two drug stores, two blacksmith shops, a corn mill, school house, post office, two churches and several residences.

The town of Appleton had been established in 1866 by Capt. Stevens. It was just near the State line, between Kansas and Missouri, and was called Wheeling on the Missouri side. The town contained a post office, three stores, blacksmith shop, etc., but after Memphis was started Appleton became absorbed by it and is now no more.

The post office was established at Memphis in 1874. W. R. Clybourn was commissioned Postmaster, and he has since occupied that position.

The first school taught in the town was a select school, taught by Miss Adelia Moore, in 1878, and was kept in a private residence. During the next summer, a school was taught by Mrs. James in the school building that had been erected in the early part of the year.

The first religious services were held in the depot in the summer of 1875 by the Baptists. During that summer a Sunday school was organized, and T. Woodard was chosen Superintendent. The Baptist church building was erected in 1881 and the Methodist in 1882, both being small frame structures.

The country surrounding the town is excellent for agricultural purposes, and is underlaid with vast coal fields. The development of these important industries will, in time, insure the growth and importance of the town.

In 1862, he was captured by a party of about eighty men belonging to the Livingstone band, taken from his house, robbed of $90 or $100 in cash and was released finally to return home, though they killed his neighbors Southerd and H. Howard, wounding Charlie Howard. During the latter part of the rebellion, after his capture, he was in the State Militia. The same year he was called out to make a raid into Missouri with Capt. Bray's command. In the meantime, between his militia services and avoiding the bushwhackers, his farm did not develop; it was not till afterward that he made the fine place he has now. Mr. Bauguess married Miss Holliday, and they have five children living, four deceased. He was Justice of the Peace for twelve years, being elected in 1858. They have three children—one daughter and two sons.

T. M. GORDON, farmer, Section 32, P. O. Hammond, is a native of Syracuse, N. Y., and was born in 1814. When a young man he moved to Ohio, in the year that the cholera epidemic was devastating Eastern cities, and as he passed onward he found Buffalo and other places almost deserted. He settled in Lake County and went to farming, where he stayed until 1869, when he came to Kansas and bought his farm of Mr. Johnson. He has since improved and increased it, until now he has 320 acres, which is farmed in mixed farming, raising stock and grain. In 1839, he married Miss Ferguson; she died, and he married again, Miss Brown, of Ohio. They have had four boys and three girls—H. S. Gordon is a master mechanic at Dayton, Ohio; Alvin is an engineer on the railroad; Hiram B. is at home and Blake A. is a farmer; his eldest daughter, Mrs. Brinkerhoff, is dead; his second daughter is now Mrs. DeMoisey, and the third, Belle, is at home. Mr. Gordon has held township and school offices, and has not had better crops than this year (1882). He also had a good crop in 1875.

MRS. EUNICE GUNSAULLAS, the relict of H. B. Gunsaullas, deceased, P. O. Barnesville. She is a native of New York, and was married to him May 20, 1847, in Indiana, her maiden name being Harris. Mr. Gunsaullas was born November 16, 1825, in Richland County, Ohio, and died in January, 1873. In boyhood, he was a nature that devoted himself to a variety of trades, having a genius for all, probably following shoemaking the longest, and after their marriage was employed in a saw mill, and came to Kansas in 1859, the family staying at Barnesville until he could arrange for their convenience on the claim, locating in 1862 on Section 9, where he had 160 acres, until giving his son Levi eighty. During Mr. Gunsaullas's lifetime, he always took an active part in politics, representing several township offices, discharging the duties of such in a satisfactory manner. At his death, he left a family of five children—two sons, Frank, who runs the farm, and Levi, who is married; three daughters, Cornelia and Cordelia, who are teachers, having attended the Kansas Normal College, and Anna, who stays at home.

WILLIAM HINTON, farmer, Section 5, P. O. Fulton, is a native of Bullitt County, Ky., born in 1828. His father moved to Indiana in 1840. While here he was engaged in milling and river work at which he was employed until 1855, when he (William) came to Kansas, and located on Section 21, Freedom Township. This farm he entered in 1861. This was in accordance with the advice from his friend, S. Williams, who was in the United States Land Office in 1859. On this farm he remained until 1879, only leaving it to recruit his health, for which purpose he went to the mountains, returning vigorous and sound, but the symptoms of his old complaint returned, and his physician suggested a change of neighborhood, so he went to the farm where he is at present, in a beautiful situation. During the war, he, like his neighbors, was called out to defend their homes, acting as Commissary Sergeant. He had several narrow escapes from capture, staying in the fields or forest over night and visiting his family in the day time. But at the close of the war he returned to the ordinary manner of living. In 1859, he was Township Supervisor, and was Justice of the Peace for eight years. In 1868, was Representative, and has held minor offices since. He was married in 1853, but lost his first wife in 1856; he then married Mrs. Young, formerly Miss Smith, of Missouri. He has had seven children, two of whom are living. His crops for 1882 are good.

L. M. HODGES, farmer, Section 10, P. O. Barnesville, is a native of Sumner County, Tenn., born May 10, 1819. In his youth he was in his father's smithy, and as he grew older he gradually picked up the trade and worked at it. In 1847, they all moved to Kentucky, where they lived until 1850, when he went to Macon County, Mo. From there he came to Kansas in 1859, bringing two teams. Accompanying him was his brother Ephraim and Mr. Tom Clark and family. He camped on the banks of the Osage River until he got possession of his claim, which he bought of a man named Gunter, giving a team of horses and wagon for 160 acres, which has since increased to 320 acres. This is farmed in stock and grain. He keeps fifty head of cattle and some horses. His crops for 1882 were very fine, corn and oats turning out forty bushels to the acre. He has already entered into the new industry of raising Castor beans. During the war, he served in 1862 in the Home Guards, Sixth Kansas, and then was mustered out and joined the State Militia, and served until they were disbanded. He married Miss Lucinda Dixon, of Tennessee, who was born May 26, 1824, and they had the following children: Catherine; John, born in Tennessee; Mary E.; Benjamin, deceased; Robert R., deceased, born in Kentucky; Edmund P., James W., Thomas M. and Alex N., all deceased, born in Missouri; Louisa J., Sarah M., Alice A., deceased, and Frances J., Franklin J. and Asa, alive, were born in Kansas.

B. B. JORDAN, farmer, stock-grower and feeder, Section 15, P. O. Fort Scott, was born in Indiana in 1836. He was raised on a farm and received a collegiate education. Was engaged in the mercantile business in Indiana twelve years, then came to Fort Scott, Kan., in 1870. In the stock business, bought and shipped stock twelve years exclusively. In 1876, he bought 480 acres of land in Osage Township, and began raising and feeding stock. He keeps on hand about 250 head of cattle and 400 hogs. He formerly kept about 2,000 sheep. Dropped sheep in 1881, because cattle and sheep could not be profitably raised together. His farm is composed mostly of raw land, which he is getting into blue grass and clover as fast as possible. He has about 180 acres in corn, the rest in clover and blue grass. The farm is divided up by hedge, wire and plank fences. He was married to Mary J. Conway, of Indiana, in October, 1866. They have one son, Frank C., born in June, 1868, who is now at the Normal School at Fort Scott.

WILLIAM JORDAN, farmer, Section 12, P. O. Barnesville, is a native of Breckinridge County, Ky., born in 1820. His father had moved to this State in 1800, remaining until 1827, when he moved to Indiana. They lived in this State until 1866, and Mr. Jourdan grew to manhood, getting the rudiments of an education from the common schools of the neighborhood, and giving his attention to farming afterward. He was a member of the Home Guards during the rebellion, and when twenty-four years of age he married a Miss Mack, who lived to come to Kansas with him in 1866, and after the privations and labor of establishing her husband and family, quietly passed away in 1877. Mr. Jordan bought his farm of John McNeil, it being one of the first farms opened in this township, on which many scenes of border ruffianism was enacted. He built a good residence on the place in 1873, and otherwise improved it. He has five married daughters—Mrs. Johnson is keeping house for him, besides there are Mrs. Coffman, Mrs. Renshaw, Mrs. Cox and Mrs. Kessinger. Mr. Jordan has held offices of trust for the township.

H. L. KING, farmer, Section 23, P.O. Barnesville, is a native of New York, born September 4, 1841, making a difference of two days in the ages of himself and his friend, Mr. Chapin. Mr. King, after finishing his schooling, went into the schoolroom as a teacher, but afterward went into the commercial line, and when he went to Illinois entered a mercantile establishment in Whitehall, going from there to Pennsylvania. But in 1868 he came back to Illinois and married Miss Doud, and then came West, intending to go to Jasper County, Mo., but coming to Kansas they tramped through the State from the north, coming into Bourbon County, and Mr. King located on his present farm, where he has his life's friend with him on the adjoining farm. He has a farm of ninety acres, and reports the best of crops this year. His corn will go fifty bushels to an acre. He was Township Trustee in 1876–77 and 1878, and has held other offices. His family consists of one son and one daughter.

WILLIAM LOUNSBURY, farmer, Section 19, P. O. Fulton, is a native of Westmoreland County, N. B. and was born in 1818. His father took the family to Maine when he was about eight years of age. Here they remained while William was growing to man's estate, surrounded by scenes which make up the experience of the Maine lumberman. At the age of twenty-one, he removed to Albert County, N. B. While here he was engaged in lumbering and rafting. April 22, 1841, he married Miss Hopper, both of them from the same parish, Elgin. In 1852, they moved West to Green County, Wis., locating on Sugar River, coming to Kansas in 1859, and located on Section 19, taking 160 acres. His first crop was a failure, his cattle died with the Texas fever, but in 1861 he had a good crop. When the war broke out he was appointed Captain of Company I, Sixth Kansas Militia, and acted under orders from Mound City until 1864, when he moved with fifteen men to Barnesville and received supplies from Fort Scott. In 1864, after Price's raid, the militia returned to their homes. Mr. Lounsbury and wife had twelve children, nine of whom are alive—Nehemiah, Isaiah and William H., deceased; James, Michael, George, Benjamin F., Thomas G., Andrew J., Amanda, now Mrs. Blake, Grace, now Mrs. Hazlett, and Almira J.

J. A. McDONALD, farmer and stock-raiser, Section 31, P. O. Fort Scott, is a native of Ohio, born in 1839, and raised on a farm and cattle ranch. He came West to Kansas with the intention of going into the stock business, and came to Bourbon County in 1880, buying a farm. He had about sixty acres fenced. He now has 1,840 acres, all in good fence. He has three pastures, in which his cattle graze at different times of the year, containing 1,040 acres. His pastures will graze 400 head of cattle well. He also raises corn, and cuts hay enough on his ranch to winter 400 cattle (half corn fed) and turn them off for beef each year in July and August. Mr. McDonald has taken but two years in doing all this, which any man can do in the same time in this State. In 1859, he married in Ohio and has a family of seven children.

JOHN McNEIL, farmer, Section 4, P. O. Fulton, is a native of Miami County, Ohio, born in February, 1812. His ancestors run back among the patriots of America. His father was one of Hull's army at the time of his unfortunate surrender to the English. Mr. McNeil remained at home on his father's farm until he was twenty-one years of age, then he married Miss Elizabeth Ried in December, 1833, and moved to Champaign County, where he made a farm. In 1837, we find him in Park County, Ind., clearing and improving. Having then made the place, he sold and moved to Vermillion County, Ind., then across the line into Vermillion County, Ill. Here he made another farm, then going to Mason County he started another farm. From there he intended going to Jasper County, Mo., and had his effects shipped to Jefferson City, but came on to Bourbon County, Kan., and put his tent on the banks of Osage River. He then located on Section 12 until 1866. He then moved on to this farm, but rented this and went to Section 36, where after living five years he came back and now is engaged in mixed farming, stock and grain. During the war of 1861 to 1865, he was between the two armies, and for two years slept in the fields or timber. At one time he was captured by bushwhackers, and was taken out to be killed three different times, but escaped. He had three sons in the service. His first wife died; was married the second time to Miss Maria A. Ross. He had in all seventeen children, thirteen now alive and living in this county. Mr. McNeil is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

MELVIN MANNING, farmer, Section 1, P. O. Barnesville, is a native of Edgar County, Ill., born November 17, 1836. He was raised on the farm, and in 1861 he enlisted in the Twenty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, Company D, and served three years and three months. During that time he was wounded thrice, the first time at the battle of Pea Ridge; he had his leg broken; and at the battle of Mission Ridge he was wounded and confined to the hospital for sixteen weeks. Being mustered out he returned to the farm, and in 1866 came to Kansas and bought of Peter Orr a farm in Section 1, but not liking the society as it existed he went to Fort Scott and tried teaming, hauling goods for C. Morely from Pleasant Hill and Kansas City to Fort Scott. In the winter of 1866, he went back to Edgar County, Ill., and there he married Mrs. Price. He lived there until 1873, when he returned to his farm here, and has always been successful in raising good crops of corn, wheat and oats and some stock. They have but one daughter, Ida Belle, having lost a son, Mattison Brady. Watson, her son, is living with them.

JOHN W. MARTIN, farmer, Section 29, P. O. Fulton, is a native of Virginia, and was born in 1851. His father, Melker J. Martin, is one of the pioneers of the county, coming to Kansas in 1858, and, on account of the border warfare, moved back East again; but they all returned to Bourbon County in 1859, and located on Section 29, taking 160 acres. During the war, his father was in the State militia, as was a brother. John W. now carries on the farm. This year he reports heavy crops, experimenting in broom corn and flax, both of which have yielded well. In 1878, he married Miss Morehead, who is, or was, a member of a pioneer family of this township. They have one child. In 1864, their buildings were all burned, so they have rebuilt and placed fine improvements on the place.

FRANK MESSINGER, general merchant, Barnesville, is a native of Pennsylvania. His father, John, came from Illinois to Kansas in 1860. He was a native of Perry County, Penn., and was born in 1819. After coming to Bourbon County, he went to farming on Section 20. On the breaking out of the war his father entered the State militia, and was stationed at Barnesville, in Capt. Lousberry's company. In 1864, there were some twenty-seven bushwhackers attacked two men, William Nugent and William Beckford, in their cabin, but were put to flight by their determined resistance. This Mr. Nugent was afterward a partner in the store. In 1865, Mr. Messinger sold his farm and moved to Barnesville, and opened a store. The firm was then Nickerson & Messinger, having a stock of $800 or $900 worth, and the store room was only 20x16. In 1866, William Nugent bought into the firm, but in 1867 we find that the firm was simply John Messinger, and in 1871 he turned the business over to his son, the present proprietor, who is doing a business of some $30,000 per annum. In 1871, Frank married Miss Stevens. They have four children, three boys and a girl. The old family consists of Frank, J. J., Sarah, now Mrs. S. Morrill, and Emma, now Mrs. E. Morrill.

NATHANIEL OATES, farmer, Section 27, P. O. Barnesville, is a native of Virginia, born in the Shenandoah Valley in 1824. He spent twenty years of his boyhood on the farm, and two years later went to Hardy County, where he learned the trade of riflemaker, at which he worked until 1857. In the meantime he had married a Miss McQuade. On leaving Virginia, he moved to Vernon County, Mo., where he went to farming. In this vocation, he changed his location to Bourbon County, Kan., taking the farm on Section 20, Osage Township, where he remained until after the war. During the years of the rebellion, he was First Lieutenant in Company I, Sixth Kansas State Militia, and was called out at several times. In 1864, when Gen. Price raided into the State, his company and regiment were ordered out and marched to Hickman Mills, Mo. At this time the company was under his command. From there they went to Kansas City, and afterward participated in the battles of Westport. As the regiment marched down the State line the soldiers returned to their farms and citizen's life. In March, 1865, he moved to his farm on Section 27, taking 160 acres, which, being on the New York Indian reservation, he bought the farm of the Government in 1875. The soil is rich and deep and well watered, returning bountiful crops this year of 1882. They have three children, a daughter, now Mrs. Roy, and two sons. Mr. Oates has held offices of trust in his township, and for four years was Justice of the Peace.

HENRY TODD, farmer, Section 35, P. O. Fort Scott, is a native of Durham, Cumberland Co., England, and was born January 12, 1833. He was raised to work in the coal mines, where the Queen's mandate found him. Being under ten years of age he was compelled to quit, but went back and worked again as soon as old enough. In following mining he worked in North England and in the iron mines of Scotland. His father had preceded him to America, so he started in 1855, and on arriving went to work in Massillon, Ohio, where he lost what money he had, and was then appointed Superintendent of the mines. In 1865, he came to Kansas, and located on Section 5, Scott Township, where he created quite a name as a potato raiser, but he finally moved to his present farm, where he farms in grain and stock. His corn this year (1882) averages sixty bushels to the acre. He has 320 acres now, and is satisfied that Kansas is equalled by no country in the world. His father died in 1868. Mr. Todd has been married twice. In 1857, he married Miss Emerson, of Guernsey County, Ohio, and the last time, in 1874, to Miss McIntosh. They have a family of seven children, five boys and two girls. His oldest son is now in the general merchandise business in Colorado and is doing well.

FULTON.

The town of Fulton was founded by B. P. McDonald, O. Chanute, T. C. Myer and C. A. Morris, in 1869. The first business house was that established by Ben Ivens, soon after the starting of the town. Following this, in almost consecutive order, were the business establishments of W. H. Green, A. Parker and the firm of Stapleton, Wells & Co. Some changes and additions soon took place. The firm of Stapleton, Wells & Co. dissolved, the business falling into the hands of the new firm of Stapleton & Green. In 1870, Isaac Burton started a store, which he sold to Timothy Hackett in 1872. During the year 1873, J. W. Jewell began in the drug business. In 1869, George White began business, dealing in grain and lumber, and was the first railroad station agent. J. Hays started a tin-shop in 1870. The present directory of the town stands as follows: John H. Quirk and I. Rader, druggists.

J. W. Bainum, Wesley Shipman, Stapleton & Co., Price & Osborne, and Wilson Brothers, dealers in general merchandise.

H. F. Ruble, hardware. W. Shaffer, harness and saddles.

Timothy Hackett and W. Walford, wagonmakers and blacksmiths.

Besides these, there are three grain elevators, a grist-mill, three hotels, two churches, school building and a population of 350.

The town, at first, was called Osaga, but owing to the similarity to the name Osage, the difference being only the terminal letter, by reason of which goods, mail, etc., would often be missent to the one place for the other, it became necessary to change the name. In 1878, the name was changed to that of Fulton. Osaga was incorporated on the 23d day of January, 1874.

J. S. Wilson, Timothy Hackett, George White, Asheal Parker and J. A. Ludlow constituted the first Board of Trustees. The Board became duly organized and held meetings for the purpose of framing and passing ordinances. After a good deal of quibbling, mixed with much amusement, a body of ordinances was adopted for the regulation and government of the village. But the incorporation was delayed a few days too long, for the Legislature, a short time before, had taken the authority to incorporate towns, villages, etc., out of the hands of the Probate Judge, and reposed it within the jurisdiction of the District Court. By this means, the people of Fulton soon learned that after all their trouble, and thinking themselves incorporated, had no such legal recognition.

A post office called Osaga, was established here in 1869, with Mrs. M. A. Stapleton as Postmistress. Mrs. Stapleton has since held the office continuously. The first school was taught in 1871, by E. T. Shaffer, a schoolhouse had been erected in 1870. The new school building was erected in 1882 and is a two-story stone structure, containing four rooms, and cost about $8,500. The school population of the town is 180. Two church organizations have been effected by the Methodist and Catholic denominations.

The Methodist congregation was organized in 1870 by Rev. Mr. Harmony, with thirteen members. There is a present membership of forty. The erection of the church house, a large one-story frame, was begun in 1880 and completed in 1882.

The Catholics also have a very flourishing congregation, and are supplied with a small but neat frame church building. Among the local institutions are two secret organizations, the Mason and Odd Fellows. The Fulton Lodge, A., F. & A. M., was instituted under a dispensation September 12, 1882. J. W. Jewell was chosen Worshipful Master. The lodge now has a membership of twenty-two.

The Independent Order of Odd Fellows had instituted a lodge at Barnesville, which was removed to Fulton in 1875. J. H. Quirk is now Noble Grand. The membership of the lodge is twenty-seven.

The first child born in the town was James Hughs, a son of Thomas Hughs, in 1873.

The first marriage was that of Julia Hughs to James McDougall in 1871.

The people of this youthful town are characterized by much energy and enterprise, which will insure to the place prompt and needed improvement. The town is favorably situated in the north part of the county on the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad, and in the midst of a fine farming district from which it draws a large and excellent trade. With all these advantageous surroundings no other outlook is present than that of its future growth and prosperity.

They were declared Free-State men, and were called out at the Fort Boyne fight, and retired to Mound City for some time, then returning home, they were visited by some of Price's men, who carried off five head of horses, his brother and brother-in-law. His new industry, raising flax, is promising to be profitable. His place is finely improved. In the early times he was exposed to the many perils of the pioneer life in this State, and was in the militia in 1864, and in 1862 he was County Treasurer of Bourbon County. He was married in 1844, in Ohio, and had seven children, of whom five are alive, three boys. The eldest is in Arizona; Charles S. is a teacher of this county, and Hemans at home. From there went to Massachusetts, where he worked in a cotton factory, but the business not suiting him he changed, finally going to Sangamon County, Ill., and engaged in farming, till he came to Kansas in 1865, bought 160 acres of the Widow Gilbert, which he has improved and increased, having a farm of 386 acres in all, raising stock and grain, his corn going forty bushels to an acre, and flax twelve. In 1861, he married Miss Harris, of Illinois. They have five children, having lost two. Mr. Gorman has held offices of trust in the township, and is a member of the Catholic Church.

W. H. GREEN, lawyer, Fulton, native of Missouri, was born in 1838. Since his first experience he has been in the commercial line, and in 1863 came to Kansas. He had lost his father in 1849, and in 1860 he had married Miss Mary Sherman, of Wellsville, Ohio; from which marriage he has two girls. When he came West he located at Fort Lincoln and opened a store of general merchandise; the firm was Knowles & Green. While here he met with a great disaster, nearly losing his life. It was in 1864, a detachment of Price's army took the place and burned all the buildings but one; his store and property were destroyed, and as he and Mr. Stevens were about to ride away, Stevens was killed by his side, and he saved his life by running the gantlet of rifle-balls and plunging into the woods on the other side of the river. In 1868, he left there and went to Missouri, returning, came to Fulton in 1869 and opened as Wells & Co., in general merchandise, changing the firm to M. A. Stapleton & Co. in 1871. Mr. Green was the first Postmaster of Fulton, then called Osage. In 1866–67, and in 1870–71, and 1871–72, he was Representative from this district, and in 1879 he was admitted to the bar. In 1868 he was County Assessor.

TIMOTHY HACKETT, notary public, real estate and collection agent, is a native of Lancashire, England. He was born in 1832, and after learning the wagon and blacksmith trade in Liverpool, he emigrated to America in 1850, and landed in New Orleans. He remained in Louisiana until the spring of 1852, when he removed to Jackson County, Mo., and afterward to Bates County, where he was married to Miss Lydia Starr in the winter of 1855–56. He then went to Calloway County, working at his trade until the fall of 1857, when he came to Kansas, and located on Section 32, in Freedom Township. His brother James had arrived in 1856, and they had farms adjoining. He was very poor, having lost all his household goods on account of a warehouse caving in in Kansas City, and after purchasing a chopping ax and a pair of boots his finances were exhausted. His ax broke in felling the first log, and he had to borrow another one to build his first cabin. He lived on corn bread and pumpkin for six weeks; he split and sold rails for $2.50 a hundred, and paid $8.50 a hundred for flour. In 1859, his house burned, and he moved to his brother's home, and in a short time this house burned also. He then took a horse (all the property he had in this world), and traded it for a kit of tools, and walked back forty miles and built a house for himself and one for his brother. These mishaps, together with the border warfare, made the situation interesting, and the early privation long to be remembered. In 1872, he moved to town, having lost his second wife. He was commissioned Notary Public, at which time he opened a law office and began the insurance and real estate business, which he still prosecutes. In 1875, he opened a wagon and blacksmith shop, which he still supervises. He has been married three times. His last wife was a widow whose maiden name was Johnston. She was raised in Delaware, Ohio. He has two living children, having lost six. He was County Assessor in 1867, and Township Trustee in 1879, and has been a member of the Masonic Order since 1862.

He then came to Anderson County, Kan., in 1857. He had a good education, which he had acquired in the East, and, on coming into a new country, he taught school, soon after establishing himself on the farm. He was present at and participated in all of the troubles that occurred in this neighborhood up to 1866, especially the fight at Fort Boyne. He came to Bourbon County in 1858, and has since been identified with her interests, owning two farms. He is busy in the town of Fulton, following his profession. In 1863, he was sent to the Legislature, and, in 1867, he was Docket Clerk at the House. He has been Notary Public for some years, and, in 1880, was elected Justice, and was admitted to the bar of Bourbon County in 1867. He is conversant with the events and men connected with the county history, and retains these things with a wonderful memory. He is a member of both the I. O. O. F. and Masonic Orders, and is still a bachelor.

J. W. JEWELL, merchant, Fulton, is a native of DeKalb County, Ill.; born in 1838. He was educated as a farmer. In 1857, his father, Judge E. G. When only nineteen years of age, he pre-empted 160 acres on the Osage, on Section 19, northwest quarter, where he lived when the war broke out. He was connected with the commissary department, and, on returning to Fort Lincoln, found that all the place had been burned but his house. He then opened a store, which he kept there till 1874, when he moved to Fulton and established himself in the drug business, and then went into general merchandise, selling out in the spring of 1882 to J. W. Reynolds. He is now preparing to go into business again this fall. Mr. Jewell has held offices of trust for his township, and, in 1862, he joined the Masonic fraternity, also belonging to the I. O. O. F. He is now one of the Trustees of the M. E. Church of Fulton, which has been but just erected. In 1861, he married Miss Blake, of St. Louis, Mo. He married again to Miss Smith. The family consists of wife's father and sister and four children.

They went up the river, living between Troy and Glen Falls, working in the saw mills of that section. In 1852, he married in Waterford and moved to Glen Falls, and, in 1854, moved to Ohio, locating in Madison County, then to Clinton County and engaged in farming. He then came West to get a farm of his own. Arrived in Kansas November 5, 1859. He claimed at first 160 acres, and bought of the Government at the same time his brothers-in-law did, John and Mike Devereaux. He has increased his farm to 640 acres, last season giving 160 acres to his son James. During the raid of 1864, he lost some property and nearly his life, but just escaping, and was in the militia, stationed at Fort Scott under Gen. Blair. Mr. Keating has held offices of trust in the township, and belongs to the Catholic Church.

D. W. McGUIRE, farmer and mason, Section 11, P. O. Glendale, native of Bangor, Me., born in 1835. The same year they moved to New York City; it was here that he learned the trade of mason and plasterer. Before he had finished school he became infatuated with the sea and ran away from home; a nine months' voyage dispelled his fancied love of a sailor life, and he returned to his trade. In 1854, he went to Kane County, Ill. and worked at his trade. It was in this State that he met and married Miss Lacey in the year 1857. Her parents were pioneers in Illinois, coming from Massachusetts in 1843. In 1857, they left for Kansas. Mr. Lacy had found a location on Lost Creek, where he had all that man could wish, water, wood, coal and stone, as well as fertile soil. In 1861, Mr. McGuire enlisted in the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, Company I, followed the fortunes of the Peninsular Campaign, was in the seven days' fight at Mechanicsville, Gaines' Mill, etc., at South Mountain and Fredericksburg; was hurt at Chancellorsville, and sent to the hospital, but left and went to the dismounting camp, where he held position as Assistant Forage Master, afterward Postmaster, and was mustered out in 1865. He at once came to Kansas, where his wife had preceded him; he located in Linn County first, but in 1874, bought 160 acres of Mr. Lacy's farm on Section 11, and since his decease, 1876, Mr. McGuire has united the two farms. He went to Arizona for his health, when he returned recovered, and in 1878, went to buying stock for Mr. Parker, and then went to work for Taylor & Delano; here he worked till 1881, when he went to his old home in Ohio on a visit, finding the old farm the site of a modern city. He returned and traded his property to Mr. Hughes for the Fulton House, but it was burned on the 11th of June, 1882, and he lost all; but on the 22d of June he started to build, and now has a hotel 26x40, the main building, and an addition of 20x20, two stories high, with eleven sleeping rooms, to be called the Miller House. In 1861, he enlisted in the Fifth Kansas, Company K, and for nine months was a prisoner in Tyler, Texas, and in 1864, during Price's raid, his father, who lived on the Osage, on the old farm, was killed. In 1865, he returned home, and in 1866, he married Miss Stone, of Fulton. He has belonged to the I. O. O. F. since 1881.

The two brothers lived together on Section 11. During the dry year they were subject to great privations, but were convinced that such a beautiful land had great resources, so they stayed. During the years of the war, he was called out several times with the State Militia; at one time, to Barnesville; then to Fort Scott and to Drywood, where he found the noted Jennison. While he was away from home, the raid of Price came down and took everything of value, horses, clothing, etc. His little girl, Bridget, concealed an amount of money in the bosom of her dress and saved it. He has, since those troublous times, given his attention to farming, and succeeded, being rewarded for his trust in the resources of the soil of Kansas. He has 322 acres in the farm, raising stock and corn. In 1852, he married Miss Kennedy, of Ohio; they have had ten children, six of whom are living, three boys and three girls.

He passed through all the troubles of the rebellion, being a member of the State militia, and driving team for the Government. During Price's raid he lost all of his hay and horses, and was left almost destitute of food for three days, having nothing to eat but potatoes. Mr. Moran now farms 280 acres, corn being his chief crop; he also handles a number of cattle. In 1863, he married Miss O'Donnell. They have a family of six children—two boys and four girls.

On coming to Kansas, he practiced in White Cloud, Doniphan County, then coming to Bourbon County in 1866, locating on a farm, where he traded in stock and carried on his practice till 1878, when he moved to Fulton. He bought a corner lot, improved, and sold for a farm, then opening an office for professional business exclusively, until persuaded to go into the drug business again in order to teach a friend. In 1880, he sold to this friend, and then bought his present stand of Mr. Johnson. In 1851, he married Miss Anna Randall, of Vandalia, Ind. They have two children, John and Kate, both married.

This has since been increased to 247, and Mr. Snyder is engaged in raising stock, handling about fifty head per annum and grows enough corn to feed with. His crop this year, 1882, will average forty bushels to an acre. His venture in flax was not an entire success. In 1833, he returned to New York, and married Miss Jennings, of the same county. Returning to his farm they lived there till he sold it, and in 1873 he visited Bourbon County, Kan., and while here he bought 160 acres in Section 31, and in the spring of 1875 broke up some forty acres and raised a fine crop of wheat. He traded this claim for the one in Section 20, or his present farm. There was at this time and in the following year, 1856, a general exodus, and those that were left were a law unto themselves. In 1858 there was a party of men collected about the Doctor's cabin and helped themselves to a valuable pair of mules, and then commenced firing into the cabin, killing a man named Conrad Traverse, and wounding the Doctor in the arm and paralyzing his left side. They were conveyed over the line into Missouri, where he lay for three months, when his brother took him to Dade County, where he recovered. He then took his brother's practice, and in 1864, went to Illinois. In 1867, he commenced proceedings in the United States Courts for the recovery of the farm, and in 1869 succeeded in effecting a compromise with the occupant, G. W. Burgess. In the mean time Mr. Burgess had roofed in a building put up by the Doctor before leaving Kansas in 1858, so he lived in it until completing his present fine residence, in 1880. In 1875, Mr. Wasson retired from the practice of medicine, and has since given his attention to farming, at least that part of it pertaining to horticulture, having converted the wild prairie into fruit-laden acres and a well-improved farm. His children have also prospered, notwithstanding the sad experience of their pioneer life. He married Miss Hardwick, and they have eight children. In 1866, he went to farming on Section 26, running a grain farm of 160 acres, with forty acres of timber; he was engaged on this for some fifteen years, till opening here in Fulton, carrying a stock now of $7,000. In 1864 he was in Mound City, when Price made his raid into Kansas; this year his father was killed by lightning, while on his return home to Illinois, just about four miles east of Lawrence. Mr. Wilson has been a Mason since 1856, having joined the lodge in Pekin, Ill. He joined the Chapter in 1858, and helped organize the lodge in Fort Scott. In 1860, the dry year in Kansas, they suffered greatly, and Mrs. Wogahn, her brother and son Charles, hauled a load of provisions from Wyandotte for the relief of the famishing; at another time her son, brother and another boy hauled provisions from Atchison; of all the aid brought from these places, they received but one half sack of flour, and during the Price raid of 1864, they lost their horses and other valuables. In 1840, Mr. Wogahn married, and has had a family of four children, three of them now alive and one deceased.

A. J. WOOD, physician and surgeon, native of Paris, France, born 1844, he came to America with his parents in 1847, and located in Kentucky. MAPLETON.

The town of Mapleton is situated in the northern part of Bourbon County, about six miles west of Fulton. The site was located in May, 1857, by a company of New Englanders under the direction of William Hutchinson, Rev. Mr. Morton, B. B. Newton, J. C. Burnett, E. P. Higby, S. W. Cheever and D. Scott. The town site was located and laid off by this company, but not pre-empted or improved. After it was apparently abandoned, a new company, composed of Western men, and consisting of Ellis Greenfield, William Baker, S. O. Hinoe, A. Wilson, John Hawk, James Hoffnagle and M. E. Hudson, formed themselves into a company known as the Eldora Town Company, and pre-empted the same town site. The company was organized by the election of E. Greenfield, President; William Baker, Treasurer; James Hoffnagle, Secretary. Although the town was called Eldora for a time it was soon changed to Mapleton, the post office having been established by that name in 1857, with S. O. Hinoe Postmaster. The name was given from the beautiful and stately maples that shadowed the waters of Lost Creek on the north, the Osage on the south, and Possum Creek on the west of the town. The first store was started in the fall of 1858, by E. Greenfield, and consisted of a general stock. In 1859, a mill was built on the Osage River, south of the town, the company contributing toward its establishment. The mill was built and run by Mr. Jackson. It is still in operation, now a first-class custom mill with saw-mill attached.

Miss Mary Burnett taught the first school in 1858, and in 1859 a small log building was put up for a schoolhouse, and a school was there taught by Mr. George Wilcox. S. O. Hinoe started a drug store during the same year, which he soon afterward sold to E. P. Higby, and the Masons organized Eldora Lodge, No. 28, composed of seven members, which now numbers over fifty, and owns a large and commodious hall.

After the completion of the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Gulf Road and the establishment of the village of Fulton, much of the trade and business of Mapleton was drawn to that point, but it is still sustained by a large and flourishing country trade. It has a fine school building 46x24, built of stone, two stories, well finished, with both rooms occupied for school purposes nine months of the year, and attended by about 114 pupils. The place now contains three general stores, a drug store, boot and shoe store, blacksmith shop, wagon shop and butcher shop. Mapleton Postmasters have been, S. O. Hinoe, whose office was at his farm residence; E. P. Higby, who was appointed by President Buchanan and has occupied the position since that time.

During 1882 the Christian or Campbellite Society have erected a handsome church building, and the Presbyterians contemplate building during the coming year.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.—TIMBER HILL TOWNSHIP.

WILLIAM BAKER, farmer, Section 24, P. O. Mapleton, native of Bourbon County, Ky., born in 1805, and when twenty-five years of age, or in 1830, he moved to Indiana; while there he was called on to join a vigilance committee, and while a member, followed a horse-thief into what was the village of Chicago, shooting the thief there. In 1856, he came to Kansas and located on his farm. The first night on his landing, he was informed of the shooting of three men about claim troubles, and from that time to 1865, they were more or less disturbed. In 1859, they found it necessary to organize a vigilance committee, of which he was a member. In 1857, he had sold out and went to Kentucky, but returned to Kansas in a few months, and stood his ground through all of the perils that menaced person and property. In 1867 or 1868, he moved to his present home. He has 200 acres in his farm and reports good crops; he has gone into stock-raising, keeping the best of Durham blood and blooded horses. In 1830, he married Miss Inlow; they have two daughters—Phœbe E., who married Dr. C. R. Clark, and Mary J., who is the relict of M. E. Hudson; he died in 1882. Mr. Hudson was a pioneer, and stood the brunt of most of the troubles in early times. Being a man of more than average intelligence, he was prominent in this section up to the time of his death, having held the office of Grand Master of State Grange, and other offices of trust. He left three children.

M. BOWERS, farmer, Section 29, P. O. Berlin, native of Pike County, Ohio, born in 1835. When nine years of age, his father took them to Illinois, and in 1855 they moved to Missouri, finally coming to Kansas in 1857. His father, Henry Bowers, located on Section 28, Mill Creek Township, but moved onto Section 29 next year, 1858, Timber Hill Township, and in 1865 Mr. Bowers took 160 acres and started for himself, succeeding so well that he now has 885 acres in stock farm, having raised a good crop every year since starting. He handles about 350 head of cattle a year, buying, feeding, selling and raising enough corn to supply his stock. During the war he was a Commissary Sergeant in the State militia. In 1861, he married Miss Edwards. They have eight children. His father died in 1867, but his stepmother is still alive, aged sixty-five. Mr. Bowers is a member of the Masonic Lodge.

J. B. BRITTON, physician and farmer, Section 27, P. O. Mapleton, is a native of Halifax County, Va., born in 1830. In 1850, he commenced the study of medicine, and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1852. Located in Winston, N. C., in 1854, where he practiced his profession up to the spring of 1858, when he returned to Virginia. In the fall of that year he left Virginia for the West, and was on his way to Washington, D. C., when the troops were conveyed to Harper's Ferry to guard John Brown, of Kansas. He located in St. Joseph, Mo., where he remained until June, 1861, when he received the appointment of United States Physician for the Osage Indians from the Indian Commissioner, Dr. Robertson, whose headquarters were then in St. Joseph. He proceeded to the Osage territory, as in August a treaty was to be confirmed between the United States and the Osage tribe, but owing to the unlooked for magnitude of the Southern rebellion and the fact that a number of the Osages were implicated in it, the Government deferred making a treaty at that time. He then returned to Fort Scott, where he remained a short time, when he located at Fort Lincoln, a fort established by Gen. James H. Lane, fifteen miles north of Fort Scott, for the better protection of the border tier counties in Kansas. Dr. Britton remained in practice there until the fall of 1862, during which time he was instrumental in establishing a post office at Fort Lincoln, and was appointed first Postmaster, which he held until September, 1862, when he removed to Mapleton to take the practice of Dr. S. O. Himor, who had been commissioned as a surgeon in a Wisconsin regiment, the regiment having been raised in his native State and at his former home. Dr. Britton lived in the village until 1867, and then located on his present farm, which is located three-quarters of a mile east of Mapleton, and is beautifully improved, containing 220 acres, with an abundance of water. He farms in the most approved style and consequently successfully. In 1858, he lost his first wife in Virginia, which induced him to go West. Was married again in 1864, and has a family of four sons. The eldest, Walter, is at Lawrence, attending the University of Kansas, from which he will graduate in the classical course in 1884. The other sons are at home.

JOHN CROSS, merchant, Mapleton, is a native of Beaver County, Pennsylvania, born in 1837. He was raised in the mercantile business, and tried farming for the first time on going to Missouri in 1859, locating in Dane County; but the life not suiting him, he came to Kansas in 1861 and entered the employ of Dr. Lyon, of Mapleton. In 1862, he clerked for D. L. Campbell, and for Hudson, Campbell & Co. in 1866, and he was with E. P. Higby till 1869, when he opened a store for himself, having for a partner for a while George Darling, and since 1873 has been alone, carrying a complete assortment and doing a fair business. During the war, he was with the State militia at the battle of Wilson's Creek. In 1859, he married Miss Blackmore. They have three children. Mr. Cross has been a member of the Masonic fraternity since 1868, and is now Secretary of the lodge, which was established October 17, 1860.

WILLIAM D. DEEDS, farmer, Section 10, P. O. Mapleton, is a native of Madison County, Ill., born in 1819. While in the State of Illinois he was engaged in farming, and for a number of years was in the lead mines of Galena. Coming from that State, he arrived in the State of Kansas in November, 1857, at once locating on Section 10, buying 160 acres of John Pitkin. This farm was unimproved, having only seven acres in corn, Mr. Deeds building his own cabin. At this time there was peace among the people of this part of the State, but it was not lasting, for in 1859 there was a party of men who came to his cabin one night intending to take his life, but, as it unfortunately happened, his son-in-law, Benjamin Bishop, was in the adjoining cabin, and, not suspecting danger, went to the door of the cabin and was shot by some of the marauders. He died six days afterward. Mr. Deeds went to Fort Scott that night, and after hunting the parties with help he obtained there he went to Missouri. This was in 1859. Soon afterward, his wife was induced by these same parties to abandon their home and follow her husband. It was while living in Missouri and trading back and forth that he was accused of carrying dispatches to the rebels, and was imprisoned in the guard house at Fort Scott. He sees in this act an attempt to deprive him of character as a loyal citizen of the United States, but it miscarried, for he found a strong friend in the Government scout, Jeff. Denton, who at once cleared him of all suspicion, and related how Mr. Deeds, at a great risk to himself, had preserved, not only his (the scout's) life, but the Government dispatches also, at his home in Missouri. These scenes are still vivid in the mind of this pioneer case although the actors have all disappeared from the country. Mr. Deeds returned to his farm in 1864, and took part in the closing action of the war in this State, that of Westport; since then he has given his whole attention to farming, succeeding in accumulating a competence, and being blessed with plentiful harvests has prospered, and now has some 320 acres of well-improved land, raising stock and corn. He has been married five times, living with his last wife since 1857, formerly Miss Lawhorn. They have eleven children; there were four by the former marriages. Two of his sons were in the Union army.

E. P. HIGBY, merchant, native of Essex County, N. Y.; born in 1831; he grew to manhood, having the ordinary advantages of the farm boy, and at the age of twenty-one, changed his course of life by entering a mercantile house in Burlington, Vt., that dealt in hardware. Here he applied himself for four years, and, in 1857, came to Kansas in company with the Sheaver, Byington and others. He located on Section 21, in Timber Hill Township, Bourbon County, and the same year laid out the village of Mapleton, being one of the Town Commissioners. In 1858, he opened a general merchandise business in company with S. O. Himoe; in 1861, his partner entered the service as Surgeon of the Fifteenth Wisconsin; his brother, J. E. Himoe, entered the firm in 1863. M. Wilson took his place. Mr. Higby, however, has conducted the business since 1865, himself carrying a stock of $3,000, and doing a business of $6,000 a year, also carrying on a farm. In 1863, he married Miss Baldwin, daughter of S. D. Baldwin, of Neosho, Newton County, Mo. They have three children.

GEORGE H. B. HOPKINS, farmer, Section 16, P. O. Prescott, is a native of Logan County, Ohio. He was born April 12, 1825. In the fall of 1829, his father moved to Carroll County, Ind., settling near the Tippecanoe River, two and a half miles west of Pittsburgh, where he followed farming until 1840. He then moved to Missouri, living for a time in Jasper County, and then in Taney County, where he bought a mill. In September, 1847, G. H. B. Hopkins, his brother Josiah and four others left Carthage, Mo., on a tour of exploration to Iowa. On the second night out they camped at Fort Scott, where were stationed two companies of United States troops, the only whites they saw in the Territory. Passing on through Bourbon, Linn and Miami Counties, they crossed the Missouri River at Kansas City, which then consisted of only a few log houses. They then passed through Platte City, Mo., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and finally reached Des Moines at the time when the first frame house in that town was being erected. In 1849, Mr. Hopkins moved his family to Iowa, settling in Polk County, and learned the carpenter's trade. In 1851, he sold his farm and moved into Polk City, and engaged in mercantile pursuits. In 1854, he sold his mercantile business and moved to Swede Point, where he was engaged in house carpentering until the summer of 1857, when he sold this business, and in the fall, in company with his brother, moved to Bourbon County, Kan., settling on the Little Osage, September 19. In December, he bought the claim where he now lives, and moved on it in February, 1858. During the troubles that followed between the Pro-slavery and Free-State men, Mr. Hopkins was in active sympathy with the Free-State men. He lived neighbor to Hedrick at the time the latter was called from the bedside of his wife, who was supposed to be dying, to the door, and shot dead, as detailed in the county history. After the killing of Hedrick and Denton, on account of the threats of the Pro-slavery men that the Free-State men should raise no crops, nor stay upon their claims, Mr. Hopkins and his neighbor Denison, rode out among the citizens and suggested the organization of a protective society. Accordingly, a meeting was called to meet at Osage City. A large crowd collected and organized by the election of Squire Jewell, Chairman. Mr. Hopkins, Jewell and Denison were chosen a committee to draft resolutions and by-laws to govern the association. At a second meeting held three days later at the same place, James Montgomery was present, but declined to speak or to define his position until the citizens had defined theirs. The resolutions prepared by the committee were submitted to the meeting, only the third eliciting any discussion. It was as follows: "That we, the members of this organization, pledge ourselves to protect all good citizens in their rights of life and property, irrespective of politics." A long and heated discussion followed on this resolution, the question being on striking out the phrase, "irrespective of politics." When, at length the resolution was adopted as originally reported, Montgomery arose and said: "I am now with you, and will be to the end." Many similar organizations were formed throughout the country, the settlers took fresh courage and went to work with a sense of security they had not felt for months. In 1861, Mr. Hopkins enlisted in Company C, Home Guards, and furnished horses to two comrades in the same company. He was afterward transferred to the Fourth Regiment under Col. Wier. He was mustered out March 12, 1862, and paid off, together with the balance of his company. When on his way home from Wyandotte, near Paola, he narrowly escaped being robbed by Quantrill's men. In the latter part of March, 1862, he moved to Fort Lincoln and engaged in mercantile business. He was soon appointed Postmaster. In the organization of the militia in the winter of 1863, Hopkins was elected and commissioned First Lieutenant of Company E, Sixth Regiment. He was afterward made Captain of the same company, and at the battle of the Big Blue was entrusted with the command of an important reconnoitering expedition, upon which he learned that Gen. Pleasanton had attacked Gen. Price. After the escape of Price from Gens. Pleasanton and Curtis, Capt. Hopkins returned to his home. He found everything destroyed, and his wife and family at Fort Lincoln. Price's forces had taken $450 from his wife, and destroyed property to the value of $2,100. In 1866, he moved onto his farm, where he lived until May 18, 1875, when, on account of the grasshopper raids, he became discouraged, and, with his family and stock, moved to Swede Point, Boone County, Iowa. In the fall of 1876, he returned to his farm in Kansas, and has lived thereon ever since. Mr. Hopkins was the first Postmaster at Fort Lincoln in 1862, and was Justice of the Peace from 1862 to 1867. He was one of the distributing committee of 1860. He was married to Miss Martha Denison December 27, 1846. They have nine children living, nine others having died. Henry S. and Martha M. have taught school; the others are farmers.

R. M. D. FEEMSTER, farmer, Section 17, P. O. Fulton, native of Lowndes County, Miss., born in 1838. His father moved from South Carolina to Mississippi in 1836, bringing his family with him. He was a Congregational minister, being a graduate of Washington College, East Tennessee. In locating in Mississippi, he took the pulpit of the church in that neighborhood, and as early as 1842 introduced the slave question. He also built a schoolhouse on his land, at his own expense, and for twelve years taught in it, giving his sons and daughters an education fitting them for the Senior year in college. When the war broke out, Robert and some thirteen other men started for the North, their sympathies being there. They traveled at night and rested in the daytime for 100 miles. They reached Tuscumbia, and there took the railroad, going to Illinois, to relations at Decatur, in Macon County. Here he engaged in farming, and in the spring of 1864 attended Wheaton College, in Du Page County. Here he married, in 1864, Miss Ferguson, and in 1866 returned to his native State and county. He became then one of the leaders of Republican principles of that part of the State, and in 1871 was sent to the House of Representatives. He was re-elected in 1873, and in 1875 was on the ticket for Senator, but the organization of their Solid South leagues defeated him, in common with all Republicans, though they did not intimidate him. In 1875, he commenced preaching, and in 1878 he was ordained. He took his brother's place in the pulpit, and when he moved to Kansas part of the society came with him. So they organized here, and chose him pastor, and have regular weekly meetings in the Oxford schoolhouse, and a flourishing Sabbath school. He came to Kansas in 1879, and selected a location, and in 1880 moved his family to their present home, where he owns 176 acres well watered and fertile soil. He is prospering, having a fine family growing up around him, all of whom he is educating in the principles of his father before him.

R. T. FORBES, farmer, Section 1, P. O. Fulton, native of Jefferson County, Ill., born in 1833. He was raised on the farm, and in 1853 started for Kansas, but stopped one year in Missouri, near Sedalia. Coming to this State in 1854, together with his brother Dave, he at first took a claim on the forks of the Creek. This was given to Dave. He then took a claim of 1,000 acres, of which he has sold some five quarters. He finally located on the present farm. There were but few in this section of Kansas at that date, and as they came in and settled, Robert was looked on as an old settler, and looked up to. Although living here through the border troubles, he was not molested. He saw all the men that were shot or hung in this neighborhood, and being well versed in the geography of the country, was guide for both Montgomery and Jennison at times. He also belonged to the Home Guards during the war. In 1859, he and his brother Dave took a trip to Pike's Peak, but made nothing. Losing their summer's work, they returned to Missouri. In 1863, Robert married. His father and sister lived with him. His father died in 1864. His wife was a Miss Banks, of Missouri. They have six children alive, two dead. He now farms in stock and grain, reporting good crops for 1882.

J. R. MYRICK, farmer and miller, Section 31, P. O. Mapleton; native of Henry County, Tenn., born in 1843. He came to Kansas with his father in 1857, and located on Section 32. He has three brothers. His father died in 1863. In the troubles of this section they took no part, their father was too old and the boys too young, so they were unmolested. His father was away from the State in 1858 and again in 1861, but then settled down. Mr. Myrick farmed until 1878, when he bought the Mapleton Flour and Saw Mills, running them since in connection with his farming. He is doing well. This season he has completed a fine residence and improved the mill greatly. In 1865, he married, and now has six children.

WILLIAM M. NESBITT, farmer and hotel proprietor, is a native of Greenboro Township, Orleans Co., Vt., born in 1832. In 1856 he first came to Kansas and located a claim in the northern part of the State, but was taken sick and returned to Vermont, where he remained until 1861, when he enlisted in the Fourth Vermont Volunteer Infantry and served until May 12, 1864. He had his left arm shattered by a musket-ball in the battle of Spottsylvania Court House. He was conveyed to Fredericksburg, where his arm was amputated at the shoulder. On the 21st he was moved to Alexandria, and July 1, taken to Brattleboro Hospital, Vermont, from there he returned home, and as soon as he recovered reported to the same place. From there he got transferred to Burlington. While there he attended Bryant & Stratton's College. In 1865 he came to Kansas again, where he located on a farm in Linn County just north of Mapleton. In 1866 he started back to Vermont, but stopped in Iowa and taught school for awhile. In 1867 he returned to Kansas and married Miss Tout; she was a native of Indiana. He farmed here until 1877, when he moved to Mapleton and repaired his hotel, still owning the farm. In 1871 he was elected Clerk of Linn County, and served one term. They have four children—Mary A., Leafy J., Lizzie G. and Vina E.

JOHN REESE, farmer, Section 17, P. O. Mapleton, native of Lebanon County, Penn., born March 28, 1816. In his migration westward he stopped first in Ohio and then in Northwest Missouri, but not being able to procure a farm to suit him he came to Kansas and located on his present farm, taking a claim of 160 acres in 1859. When he came to the State he was a Democrat, but did not want to take any side or part in the troubles of this section; after losing a steer and a valuable horse, he concluded to save the rest of his property by joining the ruling party, and after doing so, was not molested. He served in the State Militia, and has prospered so in his farming industry that his farm of 160 acres has increased to 600. Since the year 1860 he has not wanted, raising good crops since. In 1857, he married Miss Burkholder. They have four children—two sons and two daughters. His wife died in March, 1881. Mr. Reese has been a member of the I. O. O. F. since 1852.

A. H. TANNER, farmer, Section 7, P. O. Mapleton, is a native of Huron County, Ohio, born in 1837; was raised in Lorain County and educated at Oberlin College, leaving there in 1855; coming to Kansas in 1856, with a party of other men, they met a small party of Missourians, who ordered them back, until meeting a larger force near the Nebraska line, they were compelled to return to Iowa. In March, 1857, he got to Lawrence and from there went to Linn County, where he located on a farm and took an active part in Free-State proceedings, being nominated as one of the delegates to frame the Wyandotte Constitution. He was the recipient of one of the hundred Sharpe's rifles that were sent to John Brown and distributed at that time, and was with Montgomery on numerous raids. He was in Fort Scott under his command when Mr. Little was killed, and in 1861 joined Col. Jennison's Sharpe's rifle corps, imperiling his life in many instances under that daring leader. In 1860, he took a trip to Colorado, and returning in the fall of the same year, he went back to Ohio, in 1862, but came to Kansas again in 1865, where he has been since. In 1869, he located his farm of 160 acres on Section 7, in Bourbon County. It was not until within the last few years that he was able to make farming pay, but since then he has made giant strides, perfecting his seed corn in a manner peculiar to himself; has succeeded in raising over one hundred bushels per acre, and raising and handling 100 cattle a year and about 150 hogs. His farm is now 250 acres. In 1859, he married Miss Wilson, of Kalamazoo, Mich. He has two children by his first wife, and a son by the second. His eldest son is attending school in Topeka. Mr. Tanner has been a member of the Masonic fraternity since 1870. His father was a member for fifty-six years, and died at Newburg, Ohio, in 1879.

D. VAN BUSKIRK, farmer, Section 36, P. O. Mapleton, native of Appanoose County, Iowa, born in December, 1849; he was raised in Davis County, and thinks there is no place like this section of Iowa, for in 1869 he came to Kansas, going to Wichita, from there to the State of Texas, then to Missouri and back to Iowa. This same year, however, he took a claim in Chautauqua County, Kan., where he farmed till 1872, when he returned to Iowa, seeming to be able to breathe freer; but Kansas offering better opportunities for stock raising, he came to his present location in December, 1877, buying eighty acres and opening up a farm, clearing and improving; his crops are good. In 1877, he married, and has one child—a girl. Mr. Van Buskirk is a Greenbacker.

HANSON WARD, farmer and teacher, Section 1, P. O. Fulton, native of Morgan County, Ohio, born in 1840. He was educated there and commenced teaching in 1859 or 1860. When the war broke out he enlisted in the First Ohio, Heavy Artillery, and did not leave the service until 1865, when he was mustered out at Louisville, Ky. He at once went back to his profession in 1867. He moved to Missouri, and taught school there until 1872, when he came to Morris County, Kan., and taught school in Parkerville. However, he returned to Missouri; thence to Ohio, where he remained until 1882, coming to Bourbon County, Kan., with his father, Hiram Ward, who had never moved from his native place, until coming here. They located on their present farms the 11th of March, owning 280 acres, farming, in stock, and grain, and doing well.

REV. WILLIAM YOUNG, farmer, Section 1, P. O. Fort Scott, is a native of Orange County, N. Y., born in 1810, December 7. In 1827, he went to Pennsylvania, where he learned his trade, shoemaking. While in this State, he became acquainted with, and married Miss Setzer, who is a descendant of an old family who settled in Pennsylvania in 1632, locating in Northampton County, Hamilton Township. Mr. Young lived in Monroe County. In 1845, he was ordained Deacon by Bishop Wall, of Pennsylvania, and has since filled the pulpit, where he has lived, still continuing in the ministry in Kansas. He lost his eldest son in Kansas in 1855. In 1864, he moved to Kansas, bringing his family with him, and located on his present farm, where he owns 200 acres, besides eighty in Linn County. They have had eight children; his sons, W. C. and J. S., were both in the service during the war of the rebellion. W. C. is now in business in Rich Hill, Mo. J. W. is a Methodist minister in the Newark Conference. His daughter has been married three times, is now Mrs. H. S. Jennings, a prominent lawyer of Cincinnati, Ohio. His youngest son, Charles W. is farming in the neighborhood. Mr. Young has been living in Fort Scott, and on account of advancing age intends there to reside.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.—MILL CREEK TOWNSHIP.

GEORGE AMEY, farmer, Section 22, P. O. Glendale, is a native of Wayne County, Penn., born in 1835. During his early life he worked as brakeman on the railroad. This was his occupation till he was twenty-three years of age, when he went to farming. In 1858, he married Miss Salina Minor, of Pennsylvania, and then moved West to Iowa. In 1859, H. A. Williams and himself spliced teams and started for Osage City, which was supposed to be in Bourbon County, Kan., but on arriving found but one or two buildings making up the village. He then located on Section 23, taking a claim of 160 acres, on what was New York Indian land. In 1860, his wife not being able to endure the privations of the dry year, he went back to Pennsylvania. When the war broke out, he enlisted in the Home Guards, and in 1862 re-enlisted in the Sixth Kansas Cavalry, Company E. He was taken sick at Paola and sent back to Fort Scott, where his wife nursed him. He then rejoined his regiment, and on the 27th of July, 1864, in the engagement on Mazzard's Prairie, thirty-four men of Company E were taken prisoners and marched to Camp Ford, where they were kept till May 27, 1865, when they were exchanged, and he was mustered out at Duvall's Bluff, Ark., returning home in July. He has since been engaged in farming. He moved from Section 23 to his present location. The last few seasons he has been dealing in hay extensively, but now gives his attention to stock and corn, of which he has a bountiful yield for 1882. They have had eight children, five living and three deceased. His son, George M., was shot through the head by a man named Wyatt, who robbed him. George recovered. His daughter Katie is a teacher. The others are Asa, Judd and Clara.

WILEY BOLLINGER, farmer, Section 6, P. O. Mill Creek, is a native of Bollinger County, Mo., born in 1831. This county was named after his grandparents, who settled there in 1800. When Wiley was nine years of age, his parents removed to Northwestern Missouri, on what was known as the Fat Purchase. It was here his father died in 1853. The family then removed to Greene County, in the same State, and in 1854 his brothers Joseph and Jake came to Kansas, and selected a location. So with two yoke of cattle and a wagon they moved out in 1855, staying in an unoccupied cabin till theirs was finished. They then moved on their claim. In 1856, they received notice to leave the State, as they were Free-State people. They then went to Missouri, and took refuge with a minister named Redfield, coming back the next month, however, and settling in their home. In 1861, he served as First Lieutenant of the Mill Creek Rifle Company, and in 1863 joined the State Militia, going into Capt. J. J. Stewart's company. Here he was Color Bearer and Ensign. Notwithstanding the hardships and perils of the Kansas pioneer, the life in the old cabin was described as very pleasant. They at one period had post office, preaching, singing school, spelling school and literary society there. It was in 1861 that Mr. Bollinger married Miss Lee, of Jasper County, Ill. Since the war they have prospered. He now owns 220 acres of land, farming in grain and stock. He has always been a prominent man in his section, having been Justice of the Peace for fifteen years, Coroner from 1868 to 1872. In 1880, the people sent him to the State Legislature, and he is now giving his aid and support to the public schools, serving as Clerk in his school district. He has five boys and three girls, all of whom he intends shall have a good education. In the M. E. Church he is a Trustee and Steward, and Recording Steward for the circuit.

JACOB GROS, farmer, Section 5, P. O. Mill Creek, is a native of East Tennessee, born in 1830. About 1853, he started West to Arkansas, but stopped in Greene County, Mo. He then came to Kansas in 1854, looking for a location. Having selected it, he built part of a cabin and then returned to Greene County, bringing his family out in 1855, being accompanied by several other families. The only one now remaining is that of Wiley Bollinger. Settling in a wilderness, he has carved out a fine, well-improved farm, but it took almost a miraculous amount of work, and in those unsettled times a great amount of personal danger. In 1864, he was out under Capt. Dan Hall, but took no part in the disturbances, though he was compelled to hide in the timber. In 1853, he married Miss Tipton. They have five children—James, Henry, Tennessee, Charlie and Lila. Mr. Gros has been Township Treasurer for some six or eight years, and is an earnest supporter of the public schools.

D. F. HALL, farmer, Section 2, P. O. Mill Creek, is a native of Portage County, Ohio, born in 1834. He remained at home until he was twenty years of age, and then went to work on the Cleveland & Cincinnati Railroad. Having learned the carpenter's trade, he then went to Illinois, where he went to farming in McDonough County, but with poor success, for he first lost his crops and then his farm. In this condition, he emigrated to Kansas, locating on Section 2, his present home, stopping with his brother at first until he had built. He arrived February 10, 1859, with little or nothing, and since then has accumulated a little fortune in stock and land, now having some 1,361 acres, all fenced, stocked with about 200 head of cattle and 200 hogs and Norman graded horses. On the homestead piece of land he has put some $8,000 in a fine residence and improvements. He went through all the earlier troubles, losing some property, and serving in the State militia. In 1864, his wife and family were exposed to the guerrilla warfare which raged here at that time. In 1858, he married Miss Stinson. They have four boys and two girls. Being always an earnest supporter of education, he is giving his children the advantages of the State Normal College, located at Fort Scott—William, Clarence, Ellsworth, Effie, Leonard and Maud.

W. H. HARRIS, farmer, Section 1, P. O. Mill Creek, is a native of Lower Canada, born in 1838. His parents were of English descent, and settled there at an early period. In the same year that he was born they moved to Ohio, remaining there until 1843, going thence to Illinois, where they lived until 1860. They then came to Kansas in 1860, the party consisting of his parents (both since deceased), his brothers, George, John and William, also one sister, now married and living in Dakota. W. H. located in Mill Creek Township on his present farm, and has succeeded in making a beautiful home for himself and family, farming in stock and grain. In 1860, he married Miss Vineyard. They have one daughter. Mr. Harris has held many of the gifts in the power of the people, such as Township Trustee, School Treasurer, etc. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, having joined in 1865.

H. HIXON, farmer, Section 23, P. O. Dayton, is a native of Highland County, Ohio, born in 1828. Most of his youth and years were spent in Illinois, but in 1858 he came to Kansas in search of milder climate and a larger range for stock. At first he settled on Section 10, in the timber, but in 1859 he moved to his present home. He is well known as the pioneer mail contractor, having three different mail routes, and during the years of the rebellion carrying the mail was attended with great danger, especially the route from Dayton to Pawnee, where he only escaped several ambushes by changing his route each time. He carried the mail up to the year 1866, since giving his attention to farming. In 1850, he married Miss Wade. They have four children, two boys and two girls. He is a member of the M. E. Church. His farm has increased in acreage, amounting now to 400 acres.

E. KEPLEY, farmer and stock-raiser, Section 27, P. O. Berlin, is a native of Davidson, N. C. born in 1825. In 1835, he moved to Greene County, Mo., and in 1854 came to Kansas. He first located in the southeast quarter of Section 10, Timber Hill Township. They were unmolested here for a while. Mr. Kepley and Tom Whitlock explored all this country before locating, and E. Kepley built the first cabin on the Osage River, claiming all the land they wanted, as there was no one to dispute. In 1856, the family moved to Drywood Township, where they stayed some four or five weeks, and then returned to the farm. In the fall of 1857, a party of eighteen armed men visited the place. Four of them came into the cabin and engaged in conversation, while the others ran off his horses. As soon as he found out his loss, being a man of decision and iron nerve, he at once went to the nearest village, Mapleton, and rallied a force for the purpose of following the robbers. He then proceeded to Fort Bayne, where Col. Montgomery was in command. There Mr. Kepley found two of the men, whom he recognized, but was referred to Gen. Lane, who, when he heard the particulars, said he would help no Democrat. The horses were returned. In 1859, not having any horses, as he could not keep them, his steers were taken. About this time a vigilance committee was organized. Mr. Kepley and a friend, J. B. Dejarnett, at once traced the steers to Osawatomie, but found they were not able to procure the arrest of the thieves, who were supposed to be Pat Devlin and Steele. The cattle were returned to Mr. Kepley's wife, and he gave the man the reward offered, $75. In 1860, the family moved to the State of Missouri, Mr. Kepley being about ruined. But the troubles ceasing, he returned in 1861, and served during the war in the State militia. Mr. Kepley's misfortunes did not cease with the coming of peace in 1865, but in 1866 his house was invaded by two desperadoes, who compelled them to deliver $670 to them at the muzzle of the pistol, but, singular as it may appear, he has continued to prosper, and since his last reverse has steadily gained, until to-day we find him the owner of 1,200 acres, located in the richest and most fertile portion of Bourbon County, stocked with the finest Durham cattle, premium Poland-China and McGee hogs, which he thinks excel all others. His herd of Short-horns numbers 60, while he handles about 200 head of stock cattle a year, with from 200 to 500 hogs. His corn will average sixty bushels to the acre, and in every respect he is the leading farmer of the county. In 1849, he married Miss Pipkin, of Tennessee. They have nine children living and five deceased. Mr. Kepley belongs to the Masonic lodge.

B. WILTSE, merchant and Postmaster, P. O. Mill Creek, is a native of Erie County, N. Y., born in 1832. He read law with Mr. Thayer, since Governor of Oregon, and finished his law studies at the Genesee Western Seminary, afterward practicing at Bowling Green, Ind., Chippewa Falls, Wis., and on coming to Kansas was admitted to the bar of the State. He located in Mill Creek in March, 1881, and opened a store, and at the same time taking the post office. He has about forty acres of land also, which he farms. He has been married, and now has a son and a daughter. Mr. Wiltse is a member of the Masonic fraternity and a Democrat.

He had the satisfaction of seeing Forbes brought out dead soon afterward. Mr. Anderson first enlisted in the Third Kansas, but was transferred to the Sixth. He was mustered out in 1862. Wilson, moving to his present farm during the years 1858 and 1859, and during the war, although he was out several times on military duty, he engaged in only one battle, that of Westport or the Big Blue. In 1862, he married Miss Brockman, and they have one boy and three girls. His farm consists of 312 acres, growing stock, fruit and grain; he has twenty-eight acres in apples of seventy-five varieties, also peaches and pears, having 500 pear grafts on apple trees; he handles fifty head of cattle a year, and reports forty bushels of corn to an acre. In Lake County, Minn., he bought a one-quarter section of land, and in 1858, took a tramp of five days and arrived at St. Paul, looking for work, and after getting it, found he could not get paid, so went to teaching again; taught near Northfield and also near Hastings, Minn., going to Illinois in 1859, where he taught and then went to farming. In 1861, he married Miss Holeman, and in 1866, he came to Kansas, having sold his land in Illinois. He bought on Section 23, and opened up a small farm that has grown to such grand proportions since in 1868, he had a poor crop, and in 1875 had lost money on cattle; but notwithstanding these back-sets he now has 2,000 acres in his farm, handling some 150 head of cattle, between 400 and 500 hogs; he has some forty horses and mules, his horses of Norman blood. Around 1,600 acres he has five miles of hedge fence, and seven miles of barb wire fence, as well as stone and rail fences. When they organized the Home Guards, he went into that as a Major, but this was in 1865, and they broke up; he coming to Kansas and locating on his present farm. It was wholly unimproved at this time. He put up his cabin and broke up the rich bottom lands that have since yielded him such abundant harvests, not differing ten bushels of corn to the acre one year with another since 1865, the average being sixty bushels. His method of farming is similar to others of this section—stock and corn. He married in Arkansas, having a family of nine children. He lost his wife in 1881. Mr. Murphy is a Greenbacker and a Catholic.

He traded his for a colt, and, on coming to Kansas in 1859, he traded a sack of flour, a gun and the colt for his claim of 160 acres. He has since so prospered that he has 800 acres in his farm, and handles 200 head of cattle a year, with 200 hogs. This year he reports forty bushels of corn to an acre. In 1870 he moved into his present stand, which has made quite extensive, and in 1869 he married, having now four children. In the early troubles he endeavored to take no part, but finally found himself working in the Free-State party, though taking no part in the wild and thrilling adventures of Jayhawkers. He was conversant with the facts, and when the war broke out he went into the fourteen days service under T. S. Brockman, and afterward into Capt. O. P. Boynes' company, being in the Westport battles. He is now living in the village of Xenia, in the hotel business. In 1855 he married Miss Stover. Mr. Smith has two brothers living in Kansas. The next year John Van Syckle and his father laid out the village plat of Xenia. When they first arrived on their claim, there seemed to be no party line, but a family trouble arising between two families, Stone's, Free-State, and Southwood's, Pro-slavery, the settlers at once organized, and the Stevensons were on the Free-State side, and John afterward joined the Wide Awakes, a Free-State organization, and from this time to the end they were actively employed in maintaining their own against aggressors. His father died in 1862, and John was then in the field, present at most of the raids and excursions undertaken by the citizens or settlers of this section. In June, 1861, John enlisted in Jennison's company. They disbanded, and his father recruited them into Company I. John joined Company L, under Capt. Van Syckle They were attached to the Third Kansas, but in 1862 transferred to Sixth Kansas, and then disbanded on account of illegal enlistment, and in 1863 John veteranized, and served to the end of the war. Only one of the brothers is married, S. A., to Miss Abbey. On arriving in Kansas in 1860, he bought a claim of Mr. Cassell, and afterward pre-empted a piece, having now about 320 acres, which is farmed in stock and grain. He handles 100 head of cattle a year, and his corn crop of 1882 will average forty bushels to an acre. In 1854 he married Miss Parsons. Mr. Willett was the first Master of the Xenia Masonic organization, and charter member.

LINN COUNTY.

TOPOGRAPHY.

LINN County is situated in the eastern tier of counties next to Missouri, and in the third tier south from the Kansas River. The southern boundary of the county is three miles north of the thirty-eighth parallel of north latitude. It is bounded on the north by Miami County, on the east by Missouri, on the south by Bourbon County and on the west by Anderson County. The county was named "Linn" in honor of Lewis F. Linn, a distinguished United States Senator from Missouri. The Bogus Legislature passed an act bounding Linn County, as follows:

> Beginning at the southeast corner of Miami County; thence south twenty-four (24) miles; thence west twenty-four (24) miles; thence north twenty-four (24) miles to the southwest corner of Miami County; thence east twenty-four (24) miles to the place of beginning.

As thus defined the county contained 576 square miles, or 368,640 acres. These were the boundaries and area of the county until March 3, 1868, when an act of the Legislature was approved by which the boundaries were defined as follows:

> Beginning at the southeast corner of Miami County; thence south along the west boundary of the State of Missouri to the corner on said line to Fractional Sections thirteen and twenty-four, Township twenty-three south, of Range twenty-five east; thence west along the section lines to the corner of Sections fourteen, fifteen, twenty-two and twenty-three, Township twenty-three south, of Range twenty-one east; thence north along the section lines between the second and third tiers of sections to the southwest corner of Miami County; thence east along the south boundary of Miami County to the place of beginning.

By this act a strip varying in width from one-half mile at the northwest corner of the county to nearly a mile and a half at the southwest corner, was added to the west side of the county, and the area was increased to something over 400,000 acres.

A local chronicler writes that the authorities knew so little about boundary lines that they "exercised jurisdiction over a three-mile strip of Miami County territory up to 1858, and held elections upon it and made their returns to the County Seat of Linn County!"

It is also related of some of the early settlers on the Miami Indian Reservation that they were equally as anxious to take advantage of such residence and thus avoid the payment of taxes, as they were to exercise the right of suffrage at election time.

The general surface of the county is undulating, about eighty per cent being uplands and the balance bottom land. The uplands average from fifty to seventy-five feet above the bottom lands, and the highest elevation in the county, Silver Hill near La Cygne, is about three hundred feet above the waters of the Marais des Cygnes. The valley of the latter stream averages a little more than two miles wide, while those of the other streams average half a mile in width. The soil of Linn County is no exception to that of all Eastern Kansas, being exceedingly productive all over the county. On the uplands it is from one to three feet deep; in the valleys from two to five. It is generally underlaid with limestone, but in some places is found a species of "cotton" stone or magnesia limestone, similar to the "Fontana marble" in Miami County, and in the vicinity of Barnard and La Cygne an excellent quality of sandstone has been quarried. In the eastern part of the county coal crops out of nearly all the hills, shafts have been sunk and the coal, which is generally of good quality, is quite extensively mined for local purposes.

Timber.—The timber belts are generally of about the same width as the valleys, and in the aggregate cover about 10 per cent of the county. The principal varieties are ash, box elder, elm, hickory, cottonwood, oak, sycamore and black walnut. The Marais des Cygnes and its tributaries are heavily timbered.

The principal stream in this county, as in Miami, is the Marais des Cygnes. It enters from the north and flows southeastwardly into Missouri. Its tributaries from the east are Middle Creek and North Sugar, both of which rise in Miami County, and flow southward, emptying into the Marais des Cygnes within a short distance of each other. From the west this stream receives Elm Creek, which rises in Liberty Township; Big Sugar Creek, which rises in Anderson County, besides a few smaller streams. Little Sugar Creek rises in Blue Mound Township and flows into Big Sugar Creek about four miles from its mouth. Goodrich and Deer Creeks are the two branches of Big Sugar. Mine Creek flows northeastwardly into the Missouri, emptying into the Marais des Cygnes a short distance from the State line. Lost Creek rises in the southern part of the county and flows southeasterly into Bourbon County. The county is well supplied with springs, and good well water is obtainable at an average depth of twenty-five feet.

INDIAN INHABITANTS.

The Miami Reservation originally extended southward to within three miles of the southern boundary of the county. In 1858, the reserve was diminished, and the southern boundary of it established about two miles north of the fourth parallel, and, in 1882, the residue was finally disposed of by Congressional enactment opening it up to ownership and taxation.

In 1838, a tract south of the Miami lands and extending to the Cherokee lands was set apart for the New York Indians. This reservation was bounded on the east by Missouri, was twenty-two miles wide from north to south, and extended westward far enough to embrace 1,824,000 acres, 320 acres for each member of the tribe.

Before that time, however, a permanent settlement was made by white men at Trading Post, for the purpose of trading with the Indians then in the vicinity. This was in 1834, when Girard and Chouteau established the post as agents of the Northwestern Fur Company. The value of the furs collected at this and other posts in this region amounted annually for a number of years to $300,000. The Indians received payment therefor in tobacco, trinkets and whisky.

EARLY EXPLORATIONS AND SETTLEMENTS.

With the exception of M. Dutisne, Girard and Chouteau were probably the first white men in what is now Linn County. Hale says in his "Kansas and Nebraska:" "M. Dutisne, a French officer, was sent from New Orleans in 1719 by Bienville, the Governor, into the territory west of the Mississippi. He visited the villages of the Osage Indians, five miles from the Osage River, at eighty leagues above its mouth."

These Osage villages were probably near the southeastern part of Linn County, and Dutisne's line of travel would hence be through the counties of Linn, Miami, Franklin, Osage, Lyon, Morris, Davis, and then on westward, passing near Port Riley.

As early as 1827, United States troops were stationed where now stands Fort Leavenworth. Up to 1832, it was called a cantonment; then it became a fort. In 1842, Fort Scott was selected as a military post, and the troops stationed here, as well as at Fort Leavenworth, were employed to protect the trade of the frontier. A military road was constructed between the two forts soon after, and the roadway thrown up in the valley of the Marais des Cygnes, and remains of some of the bridges are still to be seen.

Previously, the deposit of lead near Mine Creek, at the place subsequently known as Potosi, was discovered by the French. The extent to which this metal was mined by them and the Indians is now merely conjectural; but the operations of mining seem to have been carried on for a considerable time, and to have been discontinued only because they were unprofitable. And it is probable that it was during the continuance of these operations that the Marais des Cygnes River received its name; as the tradition is that the French, after passing up the Osage above the mouth of the Little Osage, observed that the marshes of this river contained numerous swans, applied the name, Marais des Cygnes(marsh of swans) to the river above that point, the mouth of the Little Osage.

During the winter of 1853–54, as soon as it became reasonably certain that the territory west of Missouri would be thrown open to settlement, numerous squatters established themselves on claims in the timber along the many wooded streams in Linn County. Their primary idea was to get away from progress. After becoming located, then, in many cases, their primary idea was to keep progress away from them. They were Pro-slavery. The first to settle in the county with the view to making improvements were James Osborne and Adam Pore. They took claims in January, 1854, at the head of Little Sugar Creek, about two miles from the present site of Mound City. D. W. Cannon, John Brown and William H. Murray, all Pro-slavery, and William Park, James Osborne and James Montgomery, Free-State, came in the same year; the latter, in August, buying the claim on which he lived the rest of his life, for $11, paying $5 down, and promising to pay the additional $6 sometime in the future.

In Liberty Township, in 1854, William Kirk, P. H. Thomas, James Walker, Thomas Day and Robert Cottle made settlements. These went away during the troubles of 1856, the last three returning in the fall of that year. In 1857, D Underhill with his family, and Thomas Cottle moved in. When this township was first organized, it was named Jackson, after Isaiah Jackson, the only Pro-slavery man in it. In 1858, after Jackson had left the Territory upon the kindly advice of Montgomery, the name of the township was changed to Liberty. Jackson had done many things which made him obnoxious to the free-State men, and in their behalf Montgomery gave him notice to leave. Acting upon this notice he left, but returned in August and resumed his residence. In November, a couple of unknown men called upon him ostensibly to look at his claim with the view of buying it, and attempted to decoy him away from his house for the purpose of killing him, but could not get him away from home. One of them fired upon him, slightly wounding him in the shoulder. He then left the county the second time, and in about a month returned again to make preparations to leave the Territory permanently. The Free-State men, supposing him to have returned to again resume his residence, captured him and took him to Montgomery. Montgomery received him kindly, kept him all night at his house, preached him a sermon and sent him away with the admonition that, as the Free-State men were determined he should not stay, he had better leave for good. Expecting to be murdered immediately upon being placed in Montgomery's power, he was overjoyed at his kind treatment, and praised Montgomery very highly, saying he was one of the finest men he had ever met—doubtless a truthful tribute.

In Valley Township, the following parties settled in the years named: Samuel Nichols, 1854; James Martin, Thomas Polk, Jacob McCoy and others, in 1855; John R. ("Uncle Jacky") Williams, N. M. Hawk and others, in 1856; William and Asa Hairgrove, and Amos and Austin Hall in 1857; C. C. Hadsall and Joseph and William Goss, in 1858.

In Stanton Township the following were early settlers: John Speer, in 1855; Jonathan Swaggerty, in 1856; Charles Campbell and Levi P. and E. M. Tucker, in 1858.

In Potosi Township the following were among the first settlers: Chesley Hart, in 1854; David Lindsey, John Baugh and Washington and Russell Hinds, in 1855; John Elsrode and John Turner, in 1856; Thomas Speakes and John W. Garrett, in 1857.

In Scott Township, Samuel Scott was the first settler, in 1854.

In Sheridan Township the first settlers were Thomas Ferguson and Fabian Rice, in 1855, and Frank Laberdy and Joseph Smith in 1856.

EARLY POLITICAL TROUBLES.

The first convention in the county was held at Sugar Mound February 20, 1855. The object of the convention was to nominate candidates for the Territorial Legislature, the election for which was to be held March 30, following. The convention was called by James P. Fox, and met at a small Pro-slavery or whisky grocery kept by Mr. Miller. As Mr. Fox was instrumental in calling the convention, as the nature and action of the convention were mainly determined by the course of Mr. Fox himself and the opposition thereto by others, and as we refer to him only incidently in other portions of the history, we introduce here a brief sketch of this somewhat remarkable man. He was one of the earliest settlers in the county, and settled on a claim, which, in the early part of 1856, he skillfully managed to have selected as the town site of Paris and the county seat. He was by nature and education a Pro-slavery man, and evidently en rapport with the leaders of the Pro-slavery party. It was their determination to elect a Pro-slavery Legislature, and his desire to be elected a member of that Pro-slavery Legislature. There was an understanding between them and him in regard to his candidature. He was to secure the nomination, and they were to furnish votes enough, from Missouri if necessary, to elect him. His name was Fox, and he had Indian blood coursing in his veins. Had the Indians named him, following their general rule of applying names from the most pronounced characteristics, they would doubtless have chosen "Fox" for his surname, from the slyness and cunningness of his nature. Most of the voters in the district were free-State men, and most of them, too, although temperance men, loved their dram. No prohibitory laws were in force, neither did public opinion require their enactment. Fox was well aware of this failing of his neighbors, and for some weeks prior to the convention was accustomed to meet, on Saturday of each week, at Miller's grocery at Sugar Mound, such of the thirsty souls as might chance to come in on that day from their claims. On these occasions, news was disseminated, jokes were cracked, neighborhood matters were discussed, politics were debated and whisky flowed freely at the expense of Mr. Fox.

At last the day of the convention came. It had been heralded abroad by nailing a written notice three days beforehand on Miller's grocery door. On account of the limited time given, many living even in the vicinity failed to hear that a convention had been called. On the day appointed the convention met, and Mr. Glover was made chairman. James Montgomery, who lived but five miles west of Sugar Mound, had not heard of the calling of the convention. but happening to come to town that day was chosen Secretary. Mr. Glover stated the object of the convention to be that of nominating candidates for the Legislature. Names were submitted, and immediate balloting favored by some. Mr. Fox delivered a speech, carefully couched in language calculated to keep out of sight the one issue, slavery, in which all were most deeply interested, or to allay their solicitude in regard thereto, by assuring them that the time to raise that issue would not come until a convention should be called to frame a State constitution. Mr. Turner, who was a Free-State Democrat, and who desired himself to be a candidate for the Legislature, saw plainly that, as the convention was constituted, he stood no chance of a nomination; so moved a postponement until the district could be notified. Mr. Fox, in a vigorous speech, opposed postponement, and it was voted down. Montgomery, who, up to this time, had been a silent but by no means disinterested observer of events, perceived what were the crafty designs of Mr. Fox, and resolved, if possible, to defeat them. Accordingly he arose to address the convention, and said in substance that the Missourians had resolved to make Kansas a Slave State; that they were making extensive preparations to accomplish their designs; that the Organic Act conferred upon the settlers the right to determine the character of their own institutions; that for himself he was in favor of making it a Free State; that in order to make it a Free State it was necessary to elect Free-State men to the Legislature, and that in his opinion candidates for nomination to the Legislature should be required to express their opinions on the vital issue of the day. Other speakers followed in a similar strain, and finally Mr. Fox, seeing no way left to secure the nomination but by openly favoring making Kansas a Free State, publicly pledged himself to labor, if elected, to that end.

Montgomery having carried this point, next attempted to secure the adjournment of the convention to some future day, on the ground that as but few of the settlers were aware of the convention having been called, few of them were present, and that it would be best to adjourn, publish the re-assembling of the convention, and thus secure a general attendance of the people. In this also he was successful.

At the second convention, the issue of Free or Slave State was put squarely before it. Col. Coffey was present, and made a speech in favor of a Slave State, full of the usual Pro-slavery sophistry of the day. At its close the Pro-slavery men were jubilant, the Free-State men despondent; Montgomery arose to address them, and with a master hand cleared away the cobwebs of Col. Coffey's argument, triumphantly established the principles of freedom and the policy of making Kansas free. James P. Fox and M. G. Morris received the nominations by the Free-State party for Councilmen, but at the election, March 30, 1855, A. M. Coffey and David Lykins, of Miami County, were elected. There were two precincts in Linn County at that election—Big Sugar and Little Sugar. At the first, there were cast for the Pro-slavery candidates 74 votes, and for the Free-State candidates, 17; of these, 32 were legal and 59 illegal. At Little Sugar precinct the Pro-slavery candidates received 34 votes and the Free-State 70, all legal votes. The voting place in the latter precinct was at Sugar Mound; in the former at "Keokuk," twelve miles northwest.

At the election held May 22, to fill vacancies occasioned by Gov. Reeder's withholding certificates from certain parties on account of frauds in the election of March 30, Augustus Wattles and William Jessee were elected Representatives from the Second District; but, on arriving at Pawnee, they were refused seats in the House.

To the Lecompton Constitutional Convention Linn County sent three delegates—J. H. Barlow, S. H. Hayze and George Overstreet. The number of voters in the county at the time of taking the census preparatory to this election, was 413; but the highest number cast was for J H. Barlow, who received 124. the others each receiving 118. The Free-State men generally failed to vote, which was doubtless a great mistake. When it came to voting on the election of officers under that Constitution, there were 380 votes cast for the Pro-slavery candidate and 360 for the Free-State, and on the question of adopting the Constitution 510 votes were cast against it, 1 for it with slavery and 3 for it without slavery. At the election for officers under the Lecompton Constitution, an incident occurred at Sugar Mound which illustrates the feeling of a portion of the Free-State party toward that instrument. The question throughout the Territory was whether to vote for officers under it. A convention assembled at Lawrence December 2, for the purpose of considering this question, at which resolutions were adopted repudiating the Lecompton Constitution, and denouncing the proposed elections of December 21 and January 4. A second convention to further consider the same question was held December 23, at which a resolution was adopted declaring that "The Free-State party will not participate in the election." The conservative element of this convention feeling that this result had been brought about unfairly by the peculiar tactics of Gen. Lane, immediately called a "mass convention," resolved to participate in the election, and nominated a "State" ticket, upon which G. W. Smith was the candidate for Governor. The proceedings of this "Bolter's Convention," as it was called by the radical Free-State men, were published in the Herald of Freedom as the proceedings of the regular convention, and extra numbers of the paper quite extensively distributed throughout Linn County. The voters at Sugar Mound were mostly radical, and received the supposed decision of the regular convention with disappointment and many remonstrances; but as they came up to vote, being assured by the judges of election that the convention at Lawrence had decided to go into the election, they voted for the officers nominated at the "Bolter's Convention." Thus, they were really the victims of a misrepresentation.

About noon Montgomery arrived at the polls, and found in the post office, addressed to himself, a copy of the Lawrence Republican, containing a full history of the Lawrence Convention, both regular and "Bolters." He immediately saw what was the true state of affairs, and became exceedingly enraged. He determined to expose the imposition, and addressed the settlers present substantially in the following language: "Freemen of Linn! I have defended your rights in the past, and I am here to defend them to-day. The ballot is to express the sentiments of free men, and the ballot box is sacred only when the ballots it contains are deposited without restraint by those who are so entitled to deposit them. When it does not contain such ballots it is no more the exponent of the will of the people than if it were surrounded by armed invaders who deterred the legal voters from the exercise of their legal rights. How is it with the ballot box before us? Does it express the sentiments of the voters of Sugar Mound? No; you have been deceived! There is nothing legal in support of that ballot box but the Lecompton Constitution which to treat with contempt you deem a virtue; and the moral law, which would otherwise interfere to protect it, has been shorn of its power and majesty by the foul deceit practiced upon you. This ballot box, falsely expressing your sentiments, I will destroy; and those wishing to vote for State officers can afterwards proceed as though it were a new election. Thus, Freemen of Linn, I right you."

With the concluding sentence, he advanced to the table, seized the ballot box and threw it on the ground, breaking it to pieces and scattering the ballots to the four winds.

For this act Montgomery was indicted but never brought to trial.

It should be added that the immediate cause of Montgomery's destruction of the ballot box was that, after learning of the deceit attempted upon them by the Herald of Freedom, one of the voters desired to get his ballot out of the box, but by the judges of election was refused permission to recall it. Montgomery thereupon released not only this one ballot but all that had been cast.

The election on the "English Bill" was held August 2, 1858. Linn County cast 422 votes against it, to 43 for it, ten to one against the measure.

On the 9th of March, 1858, delegates to the Constitutional Convention which finally met at Leavenworth, were elected from Linn County, as follows: A. Danford, Thomas H. Butler, R. B. Mitchell and Robert Ewing.

The first election under the Wyandotte Constitution movement was held March 28, 1859, at which Linn County cast 341 votes for a Constitution and State Government, and six against them. The election for delegates was held the first Tuesday of June, J. M. Arthur and Josiah Lamb being elected from Linn County, receiving 455 and 446 votes respectively. The Wyandotte Constitution was adopted October 4, the vote in Linn County being 549 for it, and 157 against; while the homestead exemption clause to the Constitution received 455 votes and was opposed by 169 votes. On the 8th of November, a delegate to Congress was elected; Linn County casting 373 votes for the Democratic candidate, Saunders W. Johnson, and 563 for Marcus J. Parrott, the Republican candidate.

James M. Arthur came from Indiana to Linn County early in 1855. He was a Free-State Democrat, and as such was subject to persecution by Pro-slavery men. He was threatened with death, his home was burned, his property carried away, himself driven from home, and his wife so shamefully abused that for two years she was insane. On account of his persecutions he was elected by the Free-State men a delegate to the Topeka Constitutional Convention, and as a member of that Convention voted against striking the word "white" out of the Constitution. This constitution was submitted to the people December 15, 1855. At Big Sugar Precinct eighteen votes were cast in its favor and two against it; at Little Sugar Precinct forty-two votes were cast for it, and eighteen against it.

At the election for officers under the Topeka Constitution, James M. Arthur, D. W. Cannon, John Landis and David Rees, were elected members of the Legislature from Linn County.

One of the incidents of the year 1855 was the arrest of Elihu Fairbanks, of Mansfield, by Marshall Russell, formerly of Arkansas. The marshal had writs against a number of others, but succeeded in executing only this one. Fairbanks was ironed, taken to Paris, where he was kept in confinement several days, and then taken to Lawrence, where he was released by the people. Marshal Russell had under his command a very large posse, which remained in the county a considerable time, during which it was supplied with provisions by William Hobson. Hobson's bill for the same was nearly $2,000, and was never paid for by the Territorial Government, on the ground that the marshal was acting without authority.

At the election for delegate to Congress, October 9, 1855, A. H. Reeder received at Big Sugar Creek 28 votes, at Little Sugar 41.

The Battle of Paris.—This battle occurred about December 1, 1859, and was fought between the forces of Mound City, under C. R. Jennison and those of Paris, over the removal of the county records to the former place. Mound City had won on November 8, in the contest for the county seat, but notwithstanding this, the clerks of the Probate Court, of the County Court and of the District Court refused to remove the records to the new county seat. The Probate Judge had no influence over these refractory clerks. The time for the meeting of the courts was approaching. No court could be held unless the county seat and the records could be brought together. It was impossible to move the county seat to the records, and it seemed impossible to move the records to the county seat. How to bring them together was a knotty problem. Finally an Alexander arose in the person of John T. Snoddy (afterward Major), who went to the Probate Judge, D. W. Cannon, and proposed that, if armed with an order for the records, he would bring them to Mound City in time for the opening of court. Judge Cannon wrote the order and handed it to the doughty Major. A company of about fifty men was organized, to march on Paris. In order to render resistance on the part of the Parisians absolutely useless and ineffectual if made, Dr. Trego was dispatched with his team to Osawatomie after a cannon that was there, the Abbott howitzer so famed in Kansas history, and with this managed by Wright alias "Pickles," the Mound City forces marched in the night upon the doomed city of Paris, arriving there just before daylight, and planting their cannon so as to rake the court house and principal business blocks, in case the records were not immediately forthcoming on demand. A fire was built near the cannon in order to render rapid firing possible in case it should become necessary to bombard the town. That the artillerists were entirely without ammunition was of secondary consequence to them. The Parisians, upon arising from their beds and coming out upon the streets, were taken completely by surprise. They at once saw that resistance was hopeless, but some of the officers, still unwilling that the records should be removed to Mound City, denied all knowledge of their whereabouts. The denial was not believed, and time was given within which the records must be produced. At the expiration of the time, if they were not produced, firing would be opened from the howitzer, and the town blown to atoms. Just in time to prevent this dire calamity the coveted records were drawn out from under a bed by the officer who had himself placed them there, and then most strenuously denied all knowledge of them. Thus was Paris saved and Mound City victorious.

The Battle of Middle Creek.—This battle occurred on Middle Creek, in Liberty Township, August 25, 1856. Up to this time, the settlers in Linn County had enjoyed comparative quiet; but henceforward troubles of various kinds were frequent. All along the border, the Missourians were massing armed forces—Atchison and Reid at Little Santa Fé, and G. W. Clarke further south. On the date above given, a portion of the latter's forces, numbering about one hundred and fifty, having come up from Fort Scott, under Capt. Jesse Davis, with John E. Brown and James P. Fox holding subordinate positions, encamped on Middle Creek, about nine miles southwest of Osawatomie. Capts. Anderson, Cline and Shore, with an aggregate of about one hundred and twenty men, encamped in that neighborhood the same evening. On the next morning, scouts brought in four prisoners, who said that fifty of Davis' men were absent from camp. An attack was therefore immediately determined upon. Capt. Anderson made a detour, in order to cut off Davis' retreat, and Cline and Shore marched upon him in front. In the advance, they captured five prisoners, and released a Free-State man. Upon approaching within range, the Missourians opened fire upon them. The fire was returned, and lasted about ten minutes, when, upon the approach of Capt. Shore's men, the Missourians promptly retired, leaving most of their camp equipage, a good dinner already prepared, and two wounded men upon the ground. One of the wounded was Lieut. Cline, of Fort Scott. He was taken to Osawatomie, and, on the 30th of the same month, when Gen. Reid burned the town, was taken charge of by Gen. Reid's forces, and died on their hands, at Westport.

Montgomery observed armed Pro-slavery forces marching towards Osawatomie, and himself went up that way, but arrived too late to render any assistance. He, therefore, returned home, and remained quiet for several days, with the view of not creating any alarm; but, in a few days, upon going to Mound City, he found the settlers consulting as to leaving the Territory. The report was circulated, and gained credence to some extent, that George W. Clarke intended to arm the Miami Indians, fill them with whisky, and turn them loose upon the Free-State settlers. This report, although doubtless wholly false, increased their alarm to such an extent, that some, who would otherwise have remained, left their claims, cabins and personal effects to be pillaged and burned, as they expected, by the border ruffians and Miami Indians.

The first raid by the Missourians into Linn County, was made in the fall of 1856. The party was headed by the notorious George W. Clarke, and consisted of about four hundred men. This party went to the old town of Paris, at that time a Pro-slavery settlement. There they were joined by confederates, among whom was the almost equally notorious James P. Fox. From Paris, the party went to Sugar Mound, the objective point of the expedition. Here they burned down some houses, and robbed Ebenezer Barnes' house, store and post office. Many depredations were committed, and quite a number of Free-State families started back to the East, among them William Hobson's and Ebenezer Barnes' family, to Illinois. Mr. Barnes himself remained. Montgomery was at the Mound at that time, and was also an object of desire to the Missourians, but he managed to escape, and started, as they supposed, for home. Instead of going home, he went to Missouri for the purpose of gaining information as to who composed Clarke's band. Like almost every other settler in Kansas, at that time, he had the ague. Upon reaching Missouri, he went to the house of Capt. Burnett and sought admittance. He was taken in and cared for by Mrs. Burnett, Mr. Burnett not being at home. Some time afterward, Mr. Burnett, who was out with Clarke on his raid, returned, and found Montgomery, whom he did not know, at his house. He found Montgomery to be a very intelligent man, on his way from New York to Kansas, and desirous of finding a school to teach during the winter! Mr. Burnett found him a school, which he taught about two weeks, during which time he learned all he desired to know as to the identity of Clarke's raiders. He now returned to his home, and formed a company of seven men to go into Missouri and bring back the property stolen by Clarke's band, or its equivalent. Upon arriving in the neighborhood of Burnett's, his party secreted themselves in the timber. The Miami Indians were then still living on their reservation, and were in the habit of going into Missouri and stealing horses. The Missourians, in the neighborhood of Burnett's, upon discovering the presence of Indians in the vicinity, were accustomed to report the fact to Mr. Burnett. Montgomery, having learned these particulars while playing the role of teacher, after secreting his party in the timber, disguised two of them as Indians, mounted them on one horse, and sent them around throughout the neighborhood to create the impression that Indians had come, and to cause all who should see them to report to Mr. Burnett! His two Indians having returned, Montgomery, with all his men, moved forward and took possession of Burnett's house, Mr. B. not being at home.

Presently the neighbors began to come in on horseback one at a time. As each approached, one of Montgomery's men would go out to meet him, "get the drop on him," lead him into the house a prisoner, disarm him and place him under guard, at the same time securing his horse. In this way twenty-one prisoners were captured. Burnett himself was similarly secured. Montgomery's men then broke the guns of their prisoners, took $250 in money, selected eleven good horses and returned to the Little Sugar. Upon arriving at Sugar Mound, Montgomery, leaving his men with the horses in the timber, went to the house of Ebenezer Barnes, to have supper prepared for himself and his men, but Mr. Barnes' family had not returned, and there was nothing to eat in the house. He then went to Judge Cannon's house, but the Judge, although a Free-State man for Kansas, declined to provide supper, as he disapproved of what Montgomery had done, and did not desire to be identified with him in such operations.

Within twenty days most of the settlers returned. Some of their cabins had been burned, others were found to have been undisturbed. But a large amount of property had been carried away or destroyed. Judge Cannon found his cabin and its contents as he had left them, while Isaac Dement found his two little cabins burned down, but his household goods had been previously removed, and remained piled up on the ground when he returned.

Claim difficulties were of frequent occurrence during the latter part of the years 1856 and in 1857, and they were often sprung upon the settlers as a mere pretext, in order to create difficulties; most of the troubles of 1856, in Linn County are laid at the door of G. W. Clarke, who, it is said, "in the summer of 1856, plundered, robbed and burned out of house and home nearly every Free-State settler in Linn County, while his hands were steeped in innocent blood and the light of burning buildings marked his course." But this is an exaggeration. Clarke burnt only three or four buildings in Linn County, in 1856. It was difficulties of this kind that caused Montgomery to take to the brush, and having entered upon this course he became the most powerful friend of the Free-State men, and the most hated and feared by the Pro-slavery men. At first he fought single-handed, then was joined by a few, and was afterward aided by few or many as circumstances required. His operations may be classed as defensive, preventive and retaliatory, and it is doubtless true that he did many things which, when judged of outside of their immediate and remote causes and connections, would not stand the test of the moral code.

With six men he made an attack on Briscoe Davis, a Pro-slavery man, and Captain of a company of Territorial militia, with the view of making Davis prisoner, and securing the company's arms. Davis, however, was not at home, and all that was secured at his house was one prisoner, Brown, a number of arms and some ammunition. While Montgomery was engaged in secreting the arms, Brown made his escape. On this account Montgomery abandoned his design of attacking and disarming the Pro-slavery men on Big Sugar, and, in order to avoid the Territorial Militia which was in force, under Gov. J. W. Geary, eight miles south, on Little Sugar Creek, made a wide detour south into Bourbon County, coming in sight of some Texan Rangers. The Rangers immediately fled to Fort Scott, and gave such an exaggerated report of the number of Montgomery's men, that the inhabitants of the town deserted it in a panic.

In the fall of 1858, Old John Brown appeared upon the scene in Linn County. He had been invited into the county by Augustus Wattles to assist in fighting the Pro-slavery men. Mr. Wattles, who had formerly lived in Douglas County, had known the old man there. Mr. Wattles was one of the pioneers of Kansas. He was born in Lebanon, Conn., in 1808; moved to Ohio in 1833; to Douglas County, Kan., in 1855; to Linn County in 1857, and died December 19, 1876.

Mr. Wattles introduced Brown to his friends and others as "Shubel Morgan," and it was by that name that Brown was generally known while he was operating against slaveholders and other Pro-slavery men, with Linn County as his base of operations. Only a few of his immediate friends knew that it was Old John Brown. His personal safety required that he should conceal his identity, and oftentimes also his whereabouts. As illustrative of the truth of the latter statement, we introduce the following incident: On one of Brown's visits to Wattles' house, in Douglas County, he was overtaken by a squad of troops under Lieutenant Carr, although the Lieutenant did not know he was so close upon Brown's heels, otherwise the sequel would doubtless have been different. After the troops had encamped for the night, Lieutenant Carr approached Mr. Wattles' house, and engaged in conversation with Mr. Wattles. During the conversation, he informed Mr. W. of the object of his expedition, and told him how great would be his satisfaction if he could capture the old man, etc. During this interview, Brown was secreted in the loft of Wattles' house, and could thus see and hear all that was going on, and his men were secreted in the bushes not far away. A few days afterward Brown quietly slipped away, went into Missouri and liberated seventeen slaves.

While in Linn County, Brown usually made his headquarters at Mr. Wattles' house, and here as elsewhere was followed by a few men upon whom he could depend even under the most desperate circumstances. His work was continued throughout the balance of this year, many slaves being freed as the result. His determined opposition to the incursions into Kansas of the Missourians, and his own determined incursions into Missouri awakened the bitterest hostility against him. The Governor of Missouri offered a reward of $3,000 for his arrest, and President Buchanan offered a reward of $250 for his head. When Brown heard of the President's offer he retorted by saying that, although he did not consider Buchanan's body worth $2.50, yet he would give that sum to any one who would deliver it to him. He also said that he would offer a like sum for the head of Gov. Medary, but that he feared some of his men would earn the reward.

On the 20th of December, Brown's men in two parties, one under his own command, and the other under command of J. K. Kagi, went into Missouri to liberate slaves. Brown's party liberated ten slaves and returned. Kagi's party liberated one slave, and killed the owner, a German, who could neither understand nor speak English. This murder caused intense excitement throughout the country, and was the immediate occasion of the offering of the above-mentioned rewards. The liberated slaves were taken into Franklin County and secreted for a month in an old cabin about four miles southwest of Lane, during which time the number was increased by birth to twelve. At the end of the month, Brown went north with the negroes, and when near Holton an attempt was made by some Pro-slavery men from Atchison to rescue them, which attempt ended in failure and a precipitate retreat of the Atchison men. This retreat is called "The Battle of the Spurs."

John Brown's Parallels.—While these eleven slaves were thus secreted in the old cabin, John Brown, in another old cabin, a correct account of which may be found in the sketch of Franklin County, wrote his famous "Parallels," dating them at the Trading Post for the purpose of shielding from suspicion his friends who were assisting him to secrete the fugitives, and of rendering his effort to free them a success.

TRADING POST, Kansas, January 3, 1859.

GENTLEMEN: You will greatly oblige a humble friend by allowing the use of your columns while I briefly state two parallels in my poor way.

Not a year ago, eleven quiet citizens of this neighborhood, viz., William Robertson, William Colpetzer, Amos Hall, Austin Hall, John Campbell, Asa Snyder, Thomas Stillwell, William Hairgrove, Asa Hairgrove, Patrick Ross, and B. L. Reed,* were gathered up from their work and their homes, by an armed force, under one Hamilton, and without trial or opportunity to speak in their own defense, were formed in line and all but one shot, five killed and five wounded, one fell unharmed, pretending to be dead. All were left for dead. The only crime charged against them was that of being Free State men. Now I inquire what action has ever since this occurrence in May last been taken by either the President of the United States, the Governor of Kansas, or any of their tools, or by any Pro-slavery or Administration man, to ferret out and punish the perpetrators of this crime?

Now for the parallel. On Sunday, December 19, a negro man, called "Jim," came over to the Osage settlement from Missouri, and stated that he, together with his wife, two children, and another negro man, was to be sold within a day or two, and begged for help to get away. On Monday, the following night, two small parties were made up to go to Missouri and forcibly liberate the five slaves, together with other slaves. One of these companies I assumed to direct. We proceeded to the place, surrounded the buildings, liberated the slaves, and also took certain property, supposed to belong to the estate.

We, however, learned before leaving that a portion of the articles belonged to a man living on the plantation as a tenant, and who was supposed to have an interest in the estate. We promptly returned to him all we had taken. We then went to another plantation, where we found five more slaves, took some property and two white men. We moved all slowly away in the Territory for some distance, and then sent the white men back, telling them to follow us as soon as they chose to do so.

The other company freed one female slave, took some property and, as I am informed, killed one white man, the master, who fought against the liberation.

Now for the comparison. Eleven persons are forcibly restored to their natural and inalienable rights, with one man killed, and "all hell is stirred beneath." It is currently reported that the Governor of Missouri has made a requisition on the Governor of Kansas for all such as were engaged in the last named "dreadful outrage." The Marshal of Kansas is said to be collecting a posse of Missouri (not Kansas) men, at West Point, in Missouri, a little town about ten miles distant, to enforce the laws. All Pro-slavery, conservative free-State, and dough-faced men are filled with horror. Consider the two cases, and the action of the Administration party. Respectfully yours, JOHN BROWN.

The Marais des Cygnes Massacre.—This massacre accurred on the 19th of May, 1858. It was one of the most deliberate, inexcusable and atrocious massacres recorded in the annals of history. While the people of Linn County were quietly planting corn and unsuspicious of danger, a band of thirty Missourians, under command of Capt. Charles A. Hamilton, about 8 o'clock in the morning, one mile below Choteau Trading Post, captured Patrick Ross, who was going from the Post to his farm near by. Upon arriving at the Post with their prisoner, Capt. Hamilton's party arrested John F. Campbell, a store keeper there, and two or three others, who were released. Elder B. L. Reed was captured one-half mile north of the Post, while standing in the road talking about taking the school. At the same time and place, William A. Stilwell, who was on his way from Mound City to Kansas City in his wagon, was taken. Upon his driving up, Hamilton asked him if he knew Montgomery, to which Mr. Stilwell replied that he had seen him, but was not acquainted with him. Hamilton then commanded, "Get out and march in here." Stilwell got out of his wagon and took his position with the other prisoners, leaving his team standing in the road. Some other persons were then taken and released. This occurred near Mr. Nichol's house, which was searched for arms and for Mr. Nichol himself, but he was absent. Mr. Stilwell was searched for money and arms, and the following letter found upon his person, which was read aloud: "Messrs. Chick & Co., Kansas City, Mo.: I have sent you $200 to pay freight on goods. Please deliver to Mr. Stilwell what he can bring and I will send you the balance soon. J. W. GARRETT." Three or four of Hamilton's men were next sent to bring in Asa Hairgrove, and another party was sent after Austin and Amos Hall, the main body marching on toward Hairgrove's house, about two miles from the Post. There Amos Hall, who was nearly blind, and Mr. Hairgrove were brought in, the latter from his corn field. At the same time, William Colpetzer was captured. They then went in a northwesterly direction and brought in M. Robinson and Asa Snyder, who had a short time previously arrived from Illinois. Capt. Hamilton with seven men then started out to arrest Capt. Eli Snyder, the blacksmith, and bring him in, the main body proceeding on about one-half mile to the top of a high mound (Priestly Mound), from which elevated position the whole country for miles around could be overlooked. The latter party watched with considerable interest the attempt to arrest Capt. Snider, which, on account of his courage and quickness in handling his musket, resulted in failure, and in some of Capt. Hamilton's men being severely wounded. Returning to the main body, Hamilton ordered a forward march, and the prisoners were led down to a canon or gulch by a by-path between rocks, single file, when the commands were given, "Halt," "Front face," "Close up," to the prisoners; and his own men were formed in line in front of them on a shelf or rock about as wide as a good wagon road and somewhat higher than the prisoners' heads. Deliberately the orders were given by Capt. Hamilton, "Make ready," "Take aim," but before the order "Fire" could be uttered, one of the worst of the border ruffians, Brockett by name, turned his horse away, whereupon Hamilton said to him, "Brockett, G——d d——n you, why don't you wheel into line?" Brockett said, "I'll be d——d if I'll have anything to do with such a G——d d——d piece of business as this. If it was in a fight I'd fire." At this, Hamilton took out his revolver and fired at the prisoners, giving the order to his men to fire at the same time. Alvin Hamilton's gun, which was aimed at L. B. Reed, missed fire the first time; Reed, not being hit, turned partly round to see his companions fall, and, Hamilton's gun being immediately re-cocked and fired, received the ball on one of his ribs and fell. Thus all these innocent, brave men were brought down. On their part, there was no flinching nor begging for quarter. Mr. Hairgrove, just before the order to fire was given, said: "Gentlemen, if you are going to shoot us, take good aim."

After waiting a few minutes, Hamilton gave the order to his men to go down and see who were dead, and to shoot those who were not. Two of the ruffians went down among the fallen and fired three shots at different ones who gave signs of life. Amos Hall was shot through the mouth. One said "Old Reed ain't dead yet," and a shot was fired, when the remark was repeated, "Old Reed ain't dead." "Which is him?" was asked. "Why, there the old devil is, looking at you." But Pat Ross got the balls and he was killed. Another ruffian said, "See that man humped up, he ain't dead." The man "humped up" was Austin Hall, and his body was perfectly rigid. One of those who were finishing the butchery, kicked Mr. Hall, rolled him over, and remarked, "He's as dead as the Devil," and so let him alone. Mr. Hall was the only one not hit. One of the ruffians said, "There's a man that's got $200," meaning Stilwell; but they did not find the $200. It had been hid in the wagon by Mr. Stilwell at the time of his capture. Another said, "There's a fellow that's got a good watch," meaning J. F. Campbell. The watch was taken. Hamilton and his men then rode away in squads, six or seven at first, then twelve, and soon after the balance, leaving their victims all for dead. The result of the shooting was that five were killed, five wounded and one unharmed. The killed were, John F. Campbell, William Colpetzer. Patrick Ross, William Stilwell and M. Robinson; the wounded, Amos Hall, William Hairgrove, Asa Hairgrove, B. L. Reed and Asa Snyder.

The body of William Stilwell was taken to Mound City for burial, those of the others were all buried in one grave, some distance south of the scene of the massacre. The wounded all recovered.

It has been a query why any of those captured were released, and why Brockett at the moment of command to fire, refused to do so. From the best information obtainable it is believed that some were released on account of their youth, others because they were believed to be Proslavery, and still others because they gave the Masonic sign of distress, which all good Masons must recognize. It is also believed that Brockett refused to fire upon recognition of the same sign made by Mr. Stilwell, who was a Mason.

All the men who were captured were peaceable, conservative citizens, who had from design ever since they came into the Territory, held themselves aloof from participation in the troubles upon either side, hoping thereby to insure their safety by not incurring the displeasure of either party. The sequel proved the vanity of their hopes.

Capt. Hamilton had prepared a list of from sixty to seventy Free-State men whom he had proscribed, and this massacre was the first of a contemplated series of massacres which was to be continued until the whole list had been slain. Happily it chanced to be the last as well as the first. Montgomery was advised of the general plan, and had been furnished with a list of the proscribed men. He determined to kill Hamilton at the first opportunity. To this end, about the first of May he approached Hamilton's house, a log one, with a party of men for the purpose of capturing him; but finding he could effect nothing in the way of an attack with rifles alone, he sent a squad of men to bring the howitzer. But before its arrival a body of United States troops, on their way to Leavenworth, were called to Hamilton's relief, and Montgomery was obliged to disperse his men. Montgomery then went to the Sheriff of Linn County, acquainted him with Hamilton's designs, showed him the list of the proscribed Free-State men, and received assurances from that official that the men so proscribed should be protected from all harm.

The descent when made was made unexpectedly. Montgomery was away in Johnson County. He returned in the evening of the day of the massacre. The next evening a force of about two hundred citizens, under Sheriff McDaniel, Col. R. B. Mitchell and Montgomery, approached West Point, Mo., to which place it was believed the murderers had retired. Before entering the town a consultation was held, at which, against the remonstrance of Montgomery, it was decided to send forward a deputation and ask the leading citizens to come out to a conference. While this deputation was delayed, men were seen to leave the town from the opposite side, Montgomery and his men gave chase, captured one prisoner, against whom nothing could be proved, and so released him. The citizens when they finally came out to the conference, deplored the massacre, denied all knowledge of the whereabouts of the murderers and refused to aid in their apprehension.

The citizens retired discomfited, and separated into two divisions to watch for the re-approach of Hamilton in case he should further pursue his murderous designs against the Free-State men of the Territory. They remained on duty until superseded by Capt. Weaver in command of a body of regular militia. This body of troops so vigilantly guarded the border all summer that Capt. Hamilton never again made his appearance.

During the summer one of the murderers, Charles Matlock, was arrested, but while at Paris awaiting his trial, escaped from the guard and was never re-captured. Another of Hamilton's men, William Griffith, was arrested in Platte County, Mo., in 1863, and taken to Mound City, Linn County, Kan., for trial on an indictment against Charles A. Hamilton et al. for murder in the first degree. Griffith plead "not guilty," and set up as defense the "Amnesty act," approved February 11, 1859, alleging that the murder grew out of "political differences of opinion." The jury, "good and lawful men," not satisfied with the plea as a defense, brought in the following verdict: "We, the jury, do find the defendant, William Griffith, guilty." A motion for a new trial was overruled, as was also a motion for arrest of judgment, and the Judge, Solon O. Thacher, pronounced the sentence that the said William Griffith, on the 30th day of October, A. D. 1863, between the hours of 9 A. M. and 2 P. M., be hung by the neck until he be dead." The sentence was duly carried into effect, and, with almost poetic justice, Mr. William Hairgrove, one of the survivors of the massacre, acting the part of executioner.

The following named gentlemen composed the jury: Jacob Holderman, John Burdue, Josiah Sykes, James [illegible]rrick, William Crozier, John P. Wheeler, N. T. Smith, W. Farris, Pe[illegible]y Bland, Ira Hale, Amos Durbin and Benjamin Bunch.

LE MARIAS DU CYGNE.

"A blush as of roses
  Where rose never grew!
Great drops on the bunch grass,
  But not of the dew!
A taint in the sweet air
  For wild bees to shun!
A stain that shall never
  Bleach out in the sun!

"Back, steed of the prairies!
  Sweet song-bird, fly back!
Wheel hither, bald vulture!
  Gray wolf, call thy pack!
The foul human vultures
  Have feasted and fled;
The wolves of the Border
  Have crept from the dead.

"In the homes of their rearing,
  Yet warm with their lives,
Ye wait the dead only,
  Poor children and wives!
Put out the red forge fire,
  The smith shall not come;
Unyoke the brown oxen,
  The plowman lies dumb.

"Wind slow from the Swan's Marsh,
  O dreary death-train,
With pressed lips as bloodless
  As lips of the slain!
Kiss down the young eyelids,
  Smooth down the gray hairs;
Let tears quench the curses
  That burn through your prayers.

"From the hearths of their cabins,
  The fields of their corn,
Unwarned and unweaponed,
  The victims were torn—
By the whirlwind of murder
  Swooped up and swept on
To the low, reedy fen-lands,
  The Marsh of the Swan.

"With a vain plea for mercy
  No stout knee was crooked;
In the mouths of the rifles
  Right manly they looked.
How paled the May sunshine,
  Green Marais du Cygne,
When the death-smoke blew over
  Thy lonely ravine.

"Strong man of the prairies,
  Mourn bitter and wild!
Wail, desolate woman!
  Weep, fatherless child!
But the grain of God springs up
  From ashes beneath,
And the crown of His harvest
  Is life out of death.

"Not in vain on the dial
  The shade moves along
To point the great contrasts
  Of right and of wrong;
Free homes and free altars
  And fields of ripe food;
The reeds of the Swan's Marsh,
  Whose bloom is of blood.

"On the lintels of Kansas
  That blood shall not dry,
Henceforth the Bad Angel
  Shall harmless go by;
Henceforth to the sunset,
  Unchecked on her way,
Shall liberty follow
  The march of the day."

The ravine in which the massacre was committed is one-half mile from the State line, one mile west of "Spy Mound," in Missouri, and three-fourths of a mile north of "Hay Stack Mound," in Kansas. It is on the northwest quarter of Fractional Section 26, Township 20, Range 25 east. This fractional quarter section is now owned by C. C. Hadsall, who bought it of Capt. Eli Snyder and Capt. John Brown, paying therefor $550 in cash. The bill of sale was written by John Brown, dated about July 25, 1858, and reserved to Cap . Brown the right to occupy the claim for "military purposes," as long as he desired. The right to military occupancy appears to have been the only claim Old John Brown had upon the land, the right to the property vesting in Capt. Snyder.

It was here that John Brown built a cabin for himself, during the summer of 1858, after the massacre. It stood near the Snyder's blacksmith shop, in which he was attacked by Capt. Hamilton. The cabin was a two-story one, with a flat roof, 14x18 feet in size, of hewed hickory and pecan logs, about six inches in diameter, banked up with rocks and dirt to the height of four feet, as a defense against small arms, and with a stream of water running through it from a spring.

The Marais des Cygnes Memorial Association was organized May 19, 1878, with Hon. James D. Snoddy, President, and R. B. Bryan, Secretary. The object of the association is "to erect a memorial structure near the Trading Post, Linn County, Kan., at the graves of the victims of the Marais des Cygnes massacre, May 19, 1858, and in commemoration of their sufferings for, devotion to, and heroism in, the cause of Liberty in Kansas."

On the 17th of June, after the massacre, a meeting was held at the Trading Post, at which Gov. Denver was present. The Governor agreed to station Maj. Weaver in the county, with a force of sixty men to protect the border. An agreement to keep the peace was drawn up and signed by both parties. Montgomery was present and made the following address: "I have accepted the olive branch. To-day I came from home without my rifle—the first time for months. I have been charged with foulest crimes; but you all know my acts. I have done nothing under a bushel. If any man asserts that I have disturbed one peaceable citizen, I deny the charge and defy the proof. If any assert that I have abused or insulted a woman, I deny the charge and defy the proof. I have said I never would be tried at Fort Scott, and I never will. No Free State man could hope for justice there; but I trust we are now to have honest courts in our own county. If so, I pledge my honor to answer promptly any indictment. I will obey every legal process; stand my trial, and abide the issue."

Charles A. Hamilton, the murderous hero of the Trading Post, or Marais des Cygnes, massacre, upon the borders of Eastern Kansas, was the eldest son of an eminent and wealthy physician, Dr. Thomas Hamilton, of Cass County, Ga. Charles A. was educated in the High School of Cassville, Ga., and at the University of Georgia, at Athens. Dr. Thomas Hamilton being a man of large wealth, brought up his sons in accordance with his circumstances. Charles A. Hamilton was of a reckless disposition, fond of fine stock, fast horses and horse-racing. In the year 1856 occurred an incident which changed the current of his life. This was the advent of Milton McGee, of Kansas City, Mo., in Cass County, Ga., in the interests of the Pro-slavery party of Kansas, for the purpose of raising money to make Kansas a Slave State. Mr. McGee delivered an address in Cassville, and as one result of that address, Dr. Thomas Hamilton contributed $1,000 in cash, paying the money to Mr. McGee. The cause of the Pro-slavery party in Kansas, as represented by McGee, so enlisted the sympathies of Charles A. Hamilton and his brother, George Peter, that they immediately raised a select party of young men to go to Kansas, and devote their personal efforts to the cause. Upon their arrival in that State, George Peter established his headquarters in Fort Scott, and endeavored there to carry out a plan of proscription against such men as George A. Crawford, C. Dimon and other Free-State men. Charles A. Hamilton settled in Linn County, taking up a claim near the Trading Post, and after, and ostensibly because of the failure of the Lecompton Constitution, declared that if slaveholders could not live in Kansas and hold slaves, Abolitionists should not live there either, made up a list of about one hundred Free-State men, whom he proscribed and intended to massacre by installments, and on the 19th of May, 1858, commenced the execution of his plan by committing the horrible massacre which is fully detailed elsewhere in this volume. This fiendish crime so aroused the people and the Government of the Territory that neither of the Hamiltons could afterward live in Kansas. They therefore, shortly afterward, returned to Georgia. Soon after this, George Peter removed to Mississippi, and was killed during the war of the rebellion. Charles A. Hamilton lived upon a farm in Cass County, and then in Floyd County until 1859. Becoming very much in debt, he made application to the courts for permission to take advantage of the benefits of the State Insolvent Act, and immediately after being released from arrest migrated to the vicinity of Waco, Tex. Here he remained until the breaking-out of the war, when he entered the rebel army as a Colonel, and served during the war in Virginia, under Gen. Lee. At the close of the war he returned to Texas, and about the year 1876, he returned to Georgia, settling in Jones County. From this county he was elected to the State Legislature, and toward the close of the year 1880 he died of apoplexy. His father, Dr. Thomas A. Hamilton, died at Rome, Ga., in the latter part of the year 1859. His eldest sister married Theodore Cuyler, a brother of ——— Cuyler, at one time President of the Georgia Central Railroad, and his youngest sister married John Freeman, a wealthy farmer of Floyd County. Algernon Sidney Hamilton, the youngest of the family, never went to Kansas. He was killed during the war. The whole family, father, mother, sons and daughters were far superior in mental endowments and personal beauty to the average of mankind.

The Hanging of Russell Hinds.—This act was performed on or about November 12, 1860. The hanging was done by a party of nine men, under command of C. R. Jennison, and was probably done for the purpose of terrorizing the Pro-slavery citizens of the county, as Samuel Scott, a leading Pro-slavery man, and wealthy citizen of Scott Township, was hanged by the same party, either the day before or the day after the hanging of Hinds, and an attempt was made to capture and hang John W. Garrett, of Potosi Township, about the same time. But the pretext for hanging Hinds was that he had apprehended and returned to his master a fugitive slave, for the sake of the reward ($25). The law under which he was hanged, is found in Exodus, xxi, 16, "And he that stealeth a man, and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death."

The hanging took place on Mine Creek, in the timber near the State line. Montgomery was not present, but appears to have approved of it, as he wrote the following note of the occurrence, and handed it to Judge Hanway for the Judge's information:

"Russ Hinds, hung the 12th day of November, 1860, for manstealing. He was a drunken border ruffian, worth a great deal to hang, but good for nothing else. He had caught a fugitive slave, and carried him back to Missouri for the sake of a reward. He was condemned by a jury of twelve men, the law being found in the 16th verse of Exodus, xxi."

A number of others were tried for the same crime of "manstealing," but as it could not be proved that they had succeeded, and as they each took an oath never again to engage in the unchristian business, they were released.

The hanging of Hinds and these subsequent proceedings created a profound sensation throughout the country. To render the fugitive slave law a nullity was denounced as the worst kind of treason; but, notwithstanding, the law became henceforth a dead letter in the border tier of counties. And in order to give the proceedings of the Jayhawkers some degree of respectability and dignity, a convention was held at Mound City, December 8, which passed resolutions justifying the hanging of Russell Hinds and Samuel Scott, and the shooting of L. D. Moore.

In returning the slave to his master, the truth seems to be that John O. Turner, at the present time a respected farmer of Linn County, was more culpable than Hinds. The slave had left his master, who lived near Pleasant Gap, Mo., and stopped at Mr. Turner's house for shelter. Here he remained two or three days, Mr. Turner trying to persuade him to return to his master, who was a personal friend of Mr. Turner. At length either with or without the assistance of Mr. Hinds, he prevailed upon the fugitive to return, and he and Hinds accompanied him to his master's house. The reward was tendered, but neither Turner nor Hinds would accept it. Hinds however, did accept $5 as a reimbursement for expenses.

Jennison's party arrested Hinds about two miles east of where Pleasanton now stands, and on the way to the place of execution met Mr. Turner, with his team and wagon about three-fourths of a mile north of his house. Jennison did not know Turner, but a few of his men did; and, being Masons, advised him by signs not to reveal his indentity. Hinds, although knowing his own fate, and knowing that Turner was more guilty than himself of the crime for which he was about to be hanged, kept perfectly quiet, and so the interview between Jennison and Turner ended without the former learning who the latter was; otherwise Turner would have accompanied Hinds to that bourne whence no traveler returns.

LINN COUNTY IN THE WAR.

In the war of the rebellion, Linn County performed her full share of duties and suffered her full share of hardships incident to that gigantic struggle. It would require laborious search to determine the exact number of volunteers that entered the service of the United States from this county, but this much may be safely said, that the following companies were raised mostly within it: Company E, Second Regiment Infantry; Companies D and E, in the Sixth Cavalry, and a part of Company L; some in Company H, Seventh Cavalry; most of Companies E, of the Tenth Infantry, G and K of the Twelfth, and M of the Fifteenth Cavalry. Of the Kansas State Militia, which bore such an honorable part in the defense of the border, Linn County had of her citizens 556 enrolled. The county furnished to the volunteer service three Colonels, Robert B. Mitchell, of Mansfield, of the Second Infantry, who was promoted Brigadier General; James Montgomery, of Mound City, of the Third Infantry (in the spring of 1862, when the partially organized Third was consolidated with other regiments, Col. Montgomery was transferred to the Second South Carolina Colored Volunteers, in command of which regiment he remained to the close of the war), and Charles R. Jennison, of Mound City, of the Seventh Cavalry, the orginal and famous "Jayhawker" regiment; one Major, John T. Snoddy, of Mound City, of the Seventh Cavalry; seven Captains and sixteen Lieutenants.

In the militia, James D. Snoddy, of Mound City, was Colonel of the Sixth Regiment, and D. P. Lowe, of Mound City, Lieutenant Colonel on the Governor's Staff. The regimental and nearly all of the company officers of the Sixth Regiment were from Linn County.

During the war, raids were of frequent occurrence from Missouri into Linn County, and from Linn County into Missouri. One was made in October into Linn by a party of Missourians under Sheriff Clem, of Bates County. At this time, early in the morning, William Upton and Richard Manning were killed, and later in the day Joseph Speakes. The latter, with a cousin, had seen Clem's posse coming before they reached Thomas Speakes' house, and had gone into the timber along the Marais des Cygnes, for the purpose of holding the posse in check as they were leaving the county until the citizens should have time to collect and fall upon them in the rear, and in the fight which occurred there in consequence was killed. Among the houses robbed on this raid were those of Thomas Speakes and a Mr. Storms.

In December, 1861, a raid was made by a party of about one hundred and twenty Missourians, composed of three smaller bodies, one of these being from Butler, one from Balltown and the third from Papinsville. J. E. Hill's store at Potosi was robbed, and a large number of private houses entered and pillaged of their contents. Among these was that of Josiah Sykes, about one-half mile north of Potosi. Mr. Sykes himself escaped from his house in time to save himself, or he, being a Union man, would undoubtedly have been killed, as was a Mr. Seright that night. This raiding party was also under command of Sheriff Clem.

Mr. Sykes, who had barely time to escape, secured of his clothes only his pants, and in these, without coat or vest, barefooted and bareheaded, made the best possible time over the frozen ground to Mound City, where Col. Montgomery, with his Third Regiment, was stationed. Montgomery promptly sent Maj. H. H. Williams in command of from three hundred to four hundred men into Missouri, whither the raiders had returned to reconnoiter, and punish as many of them as could be found, but they had dispersed. Maj. Williams thereupon visited Papinsville, at the time a town of about five hundred inhabitants, and burned to the ground every house it contained. After this the Major's command was divided into two forces, one of which approached Butler, Mo., but being met by too strong a force they retired, a few shots having been exchanged with no casualties on the Union side. The entire command then returned to Kansas, bringing with them one prisoner, named Wells, a bushwhacker, who had some time previously shot a Union soldier, and publicly boasted of having pulled off the soldier's boots "before he had done kicking." Wells was treated with extraordinary leniency for those times, being kept in camp under guard all winter, and permitted finally to go away without trial or punishment.

After this raid of Maj. Williams, Camp Defiance was established on Mine Creek, in Linn County, near the Missouri line, and Col. Montgomery, with his Third Regiment, stationed there until in the spring of 1862, when the Third was consolidated with other regiments.

THE PRICE RAID.

The most important and exciting incident that occurred in Linn County during the war was the Price raid. On the 25th of October, 1864, it is probable that the whole of that rebel General's command of 20,000 to 25,000 men were within the limits of the county. As may well be imagined, there was hurrying to and fro for a few days prior to his advent, and during his presence. For two weeks previous, he was known to be going northwestward through Missouri on his way to Kansas. On the 15th of the month, the Fifteenth Cavalry, Col. Jennison commanding, stationed at the time at Mound City, was ordered out, and in company with some militia went to Hickman's Mills, Mo. After marching to Pleasant Hill on the 17th, and Warrensburg on the 18th, they reached Lexington, Mo., on the 19th. Here they heard of Price, whose army, under command of Gens. Shelby, Marmaduke and Cabell, was in the vicinity. Here a fight took place, lasting three hours, in which the Federal forces fell back to Independence, where they were met by Gens. Curtis and Blunt with their commands. On the 21st, was fought the battle of the Little Blue, in which the Union forces fell back, but stubbornly contested the ground all day, arriving at Independence about dark. Marching on to the Big Blue, they met the Kansas militia and went into camp for the night. On the 22d, the Union forces, still largely outnumbered, continued to fall back, and on the 23d were driven nearly to Westport. Gen. Pleasanton at this time attacked the rear of Price's army, and the tide of battle turned. Price's turn had come to retreat, and a running fight was kept up from Westport to Hickman's Mills. On Monday, the rebel forces reached the State line in the southeast part of Miami County, and entered Linn County in the afternoon of that day, the 24th, camping for the night near the Marais des Cygnes. The Union Generals held a council of war at West Point, Mo., and their men gained a short rest. Col. Moonlight was dispatched with his regiment to the right, for the purpose of flanking the rebels, and of keeping them from going too far to the westward, and reached Mound City early on the morning of the 25th. He kept his troops close to their right flank until they were finally driven from the State, thus saving the commissary stores at Fort Scott; the commissary stores at Mound City having been moved twenty miles west on the night of the 24th, were all saved.

In the meantime, the main army under Pleasanton came upon Price's rear guard about 3 o'clock Tuesday morning. At daylight the firing commenced, at the Marais des Cygnes, and was continued all day, to Fort Scott, a distance of forty miles. At the first attack in the morning, the rebels abandoned a large amount of stock. A second battle occurred at "Round Mound," six miles from the river, about 9 A. M. Here Price's Generals, Marmaduke and Cabell, were captured (the former by James Dunlavy, sixteen years old), together with some other prisoners and two pieces of artillery. Upon reaching Mine Creek, four miles south of the Round Mound, the rebels made a stand, and here was fought the hardest battle of the day. During its continuance, Pleasanton's battery of seven howitzers was stationed on "Round Mound," on which now stands the Pleasanton High School, and dropped shells into the ranks of the rebels to the southward. The main battlefield was two miles south of the Mound and nearly a mile west of the Antioch Schoolhouse. About 500 prisoners were taken here, and about 100 of the rebels were killed; three pieces of artillery were also captured. After this battle, which occurred at 11 A.M., the pursuit was continued to the Little Osage, where the rebels abandoned a large number of wagons and considerable ammunition to facilitate the crossing of the river. They passed into Missouri just east of Fort Scott, and upon arriving at Newtonia, again halted and gave battle, but were again routed and continued the retreat southward, followed by the Federal troops to the Arkansas River. The total loss of Price in this day's work was 9 pieces of artillery, 150 killed and 1,500 prisoners, besides a large amount of stock, stores and ammunition.

After the fighting was over, the dead were buried and the wounded cared for. Mound City was converted into a hospital. Fifty-six Union wounded and about sixty rebels filled all the available buildings, including the schoolhouse. T. Ellwood Smith, Robert Kincaid and J. P. Way were appointed a committee to receive contributions, and everything possible was done to alleviate the sufferings of the wounded.

Many incidents both of a serious and amusing nature might be given were not space wanting. Nearly every house passed by the rebels was pillaged of most that it contained. In many cases even women were stripped of their clothing, and the flannel taken from infants in their mothers' arms. Enforced cooking was an occasional occupation of the women on that day to feed the rebel soldiers. A Mrs. Lathrop, about seventy years old, living just south of Mine Creek, had thus fed rebel soldiers until she had nothing left but a little corn meal, when three rebel officers came up and ordered her to get dinner for them. She replied that she had only a small quantity of corn meal left; whereupon they told her to cook them a few cakes and she should not be disturbed any more that day. While they were eating she told them that if they wanted to escape they had best hurry for "our boys are coming." When going away, they attempted to make her give up a blouse she had put on to keep it from being taken away from her, it having been left at home by one of her five boys, all of whom were in the Union army. On account of her struggles to retain it, these officers were detained until "our boys" came up, and were shot by them, so that instead of gaining the Union blouse they lost their lives. Capt. Belding's fine horse was hitched in front of his house, when a rebel in passing mounted it and rode off, leaving his own, a much poorer one, in its place. Soon another rebel came along and made a similar exchange, and then a third, who left a horse which remained the rest of the day, being too poor for any one to take away. Quite a number of citizens were fired upon and wounded and some wantonly killed. Among those wounded were Harlan Jackson, Elijah Miller and Lieut. D. F. Park. Among the killed, Richard B. Vernon, who was murdered in Missouri; Samuel A. Long, fifty-six years old, who was killed six miles north of Trading Post; John Miller, sixty-five years old, who was killed near the Post, and Levi Ward, forty-five years old. John R. Williams, "Uncle Jacky," as he was familiarly called, was for a time believed to have been killed, but it transpired that when he came to a creek in Southwest Missouri, a prisoner with Price, in the night, he slipped down into the creek, and by concealing himself and remaining quiet until the rebel army passed on, he effected his escape.

Most of the citizens of the county manifested commendable courage during those exciting and trying times, but there are a few instances of persons who were entirely unmanned by fear. One excellent citizen who was the only man with a party of women and children, was entirely unable to harness a span of horses and hitch them to a wagon in order that they might ride to a place of safety. A young man at Mound City crawled into a hollow log and there remained until hunger compelled him to come out and reconnoiter, when to his joy he found that the last rebel had long since disappeared. An old gentleman in the vicinity of Pleasanton, after loading up his household goods and family in his wagon, drove into a convenient cove and leaving them there went into the timber and dug a hole in the ground under a log, about four feet in diameter, into which hole he crawled on Tuesday and remained until Thursday, when he found his way through his corn-field toward his house. Here he saw a neighbor's wife feeding his hogs, and when assured by her that the rebels had gone, ventured to expose himself to the open air. His fright and exposure caused him a long fit of sickness which nearly cost him his life, but he recovered and still lives.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION AND COUNTY SEAT.

Linn County was organized in 1855. The first Board of County Commissioners, called the "Court," consisted of R. E. Elliott, President, and L. M. Love and Brisco Davis "assistants." By this court the following complement of county officers was appointed: Treasurer, James P. Fox; Clerk, Joseph D. Wilmot; Assessor, James Driskill; Surveyor, William Rogers; Sheriff, Joseph E. Brown; Coroner, Elisha Tucker. The above appointments were made January 8, 1856, with the exception of the Surveyor, who was appointed March 18.

On the same day, January 8, that the above appointments were made, the court divided the county into three municipal townships, viz.: Scott, Johnson and Richland. This division was retained until July, 1857, when the county was divided into townships as follows: Paris, Tate, Centerville, Scott, Jackson, Breckinridge, Potosi, Mound City and Montgomery. September 20, 1858, a re-organization of the townships resulted in the dropping of Montgomery, and in changing the name of Jackson to Liberty. On the 11th of January, 1859, a portion of Tate Township was "fused" with that of Breckenridge and the "fused township" named Valley. Lincoln Township was organized April 9, 1866; Blue Mound, April 16, 1867; Sheridan, December 3, 1867, and Stanton, January 3, 1870. The townships as thus organized and named are still retained.

The first election for county officers was held in October, 1857, with the following result, so far as can be ascertained, the records not showing: Probate Judge, D. W. Cannon; Clerk, Andrew Stark; Register of Deeds, Jesse Brown; Treasurer, C. H. Stilwell; Sheriff, C. M. McDaniel; Commissioners, Ebenezer Barnes and Samuel Nichols.

On the 18th of January, 1856, the County Commissioners appointed a commission to locate the county seat, in accordance with the act of the Territorial Legislature relative thereto. On the 18th of March, James P. Fox and McD. Osborn, the two members of the commission that acted, made their report. They had started at the township corner on the parallel running through Linn County, a little more than ten and a half miles from the Missouri State Line, and had proceeded thence one and a half miles south—this point they had chosen as one corner of the county seat—thence east a half mile, thence south a half mile, thence west a half mile, and thence north a half mile to the place of beginning. The town site thus contained one quarter section—the northwest quarter of Section 8, Township 21, Range 24. C. S. Fleming was appointed Commissioner to superintend its survey. This town was named Paris. On October 7, 1856, P. T. Glover, C. S. Fleming and Joseph D. Wilmot were appointed a commission to "value and appraise the house on the quarter section belonging to James P. Fox, and to make him such allowance as to them may seem proper and just." The allowance made for the house was $100. It was purchased for a court house. The town site was platted by William Rogers, County Surveyor. The minimum price for which lots fifty feet square, fronting on the public square, might be sold, was $25; those in the second tier one hundred feet square, $25; those more remote, fifty by one hundred feet, $15. The Board of County Commissioners held their first meeting at Paris, August 7, 1856.

An election to re-locate the county seat was held November 8, 1859, at which election Paris received 471 votes, and Mound City 508. The first meeting of the Commissioners at Mound City was held December 15, 1859.

After an indecisive preliminary election to relocate the county seat, held May 22, 1865, an election was held May 30, at which election Linnville received 533 votes to Mound City 502, and Linnville was proclaimed to be the county seat. Linnville is located immediately south of the old town site of Paris.

An election then was held February, 20, 1866, to relocate the county seat, at which time Mound City received 635 votes, and Linnville 575, and Mound City again became the county capital An election was then held May 29, 1866, on the same question, when Mound City received 617 votes, Linnville 301, and Mansfield 170, scattering 3, Mound City retaining the county seat. The question then remained in statu quo until 1871. On February 14, of that year, after an indecisive vote in January, an election was held to relocate the county seat, at which Mound City received 1,226 votes, La Cygne, 1,389, and Pleasanton 1. La Cygne was, therefore, proclaimed the county seat, and so remained until, after an indecisive election held March 11, 1873, an election was held on the 27th of March, at which Pleasanton received 1,183 votes and Farmers' City, 1,252. Farmers' City was, therefore, proclaimed the county seat. This was a mere brush patch, located on Section 14, Township 21, Range 23. The county officers declined to accept the hospitable shade of its bushes and shrubs for offices, and thus La Cygne continued to be the county seat de facto until an election was held April 14, 1874, at which time Pleasanton received 1,092 votes to her 1,026, and thus Pleasanton became and was proclaimed the county seat.

The next decisive and last election on county seat matters was held March 9, 1875, at which time Pleasanton received 1,201 votes and Mound City 1,311, thus regaining the county seat for the third time.

RAILROADS AND COUNTY SOCIETIES.

Linn County has had comparatively little trouble with the railroad problem. An election was held November 3, 1868, at which the people, by a vote of 1040 for to 588 against, adopted the proposition of the Kansas & Neosho Valley Railroad Company to subscribe for $150,000 of its stock, and pay for the same with a like amount of thirty-year seven per cent bonds, said road to be built via Olathe and Paola, and in a southern direction through Linn County. Subsequently numerous propositions were made by the railroad company to the county, and by the county to the company looking to a modification of the terms upon which the railroad should be built, but all having in view the surrender by the county of its right to the $150,000 in the stocks of the company for a nominal consideration. No agreement on this point could be reached, and consequently no exchange of bonds for stock was ever made. The railroad was built nevertheless, and the county has no outstanding indebtedness on its account. But as an offset to this advantage, the people of the central and western portions of the county labor under the disadvantage of the road having been located near the eastern boundary. This is expected to be remedied in the near future by the construction from west to east, through Blue Mound, Mound City and Potosi Townships, of the St. Louis & Emporia Railroad, and from southeast to northwest, through Blue Mound Township, of the Fort Scott, Topeka & Lincoln Railroad. The latter road is to be completed through the township by January 1, 1883, and the former through the three townships in three years from the delivery of the bonds to the trustee. Each township subscribes to the capital stock of the road, agreeing to pay therefor with bonds in the following amounts: To the stock of the St. Louis & Emporia Railroad, Blue Mound subscribes $25,500, Mound City, $29,000, and Potosi Township, $35,000; to that of the Fort Scott, Topeka & Lincoln Railroad, Blue Mound Township subscribes $18,000.

Linn County Agricultural Society.—On the 4th of March, 1871, the citizens of the neighborhood of Elm Grove, in Scott Township, met at their schoolhouse and organized a Farmers' Club. On the 28th of October, this club held a fair at Elm Grove. The second fair was held October 3 and 4, 1872. On the 2d of November, its name was changed to the Linn County Agricultural Society. This society held its first air at Farlinville, October, 1873, and its second at La Cygne October, 1874, since which time its fairs have been held annually at La Cygne. The society purchased in 1875, thirty-three and one-third acres of land adjoining La Cygne for a fair ground, since when they have built a fine floral hall in the form of a Greek cross, sixty feet long each way by twenty-four feet wide.

Linn County Agricultural and Mechanical Association.—This association was organized in 1875, with a capital of $50,000, divided into shares of $25 each. J. F. Broadhead was the first President, and to him belongs a great deal of credit for the untiring efforts which have built up and made the association a success. The first Secretary was J. H. Stearns. The association owns sixty acres of land which they have fenced and upon which they have erected good buildings. They have one of the finest amphitheaters in Kansas. Their fairs are held annually at Mound City, and their premiums have been always paid in cash in full.

MOUND CITY.

This town is beautifully situated south of the center of the county, on second bottom land, north of the valley of Little Sugar Creek. It is tolerably well shaded with cultivated trees, and surrounded on the east, south and west by an amphitheater of wooded hills about seventy-five feet high, and on the north by the picturesque valley of the Little Sugar. It derives its name from its proximity to "Sugar Mound," a little to the east, which in the early days was a noted landmark, and where, in the spring of 1855, there was kept a little Pro-slavery grocery by a Mr. Miller, and where the first post office in Linn County was established, Dr. Isaac B. Stockton being the Postmaster.

In the spring of 1857, Dr. J. H. Trego, Edwin and T. E. Smith moved into the vicinity of Mound City, and by the following fall had erected a saw mill on the Little Sugar, at a spot where now stands Van Buskirk & Sons' flouring mills. Trego & Smiths had their saw mill running by the spring of 1858. The town site of Mound City was located by D. W. Cannon and Ebenezer Barnes in 1855, and afterward the town company was increased to twenty persons, and organized in 1857, with Charles Barnes, President, Dr. J. H. Trego, Secretary, and T. E. Smith, Trustee. Ezra H. Smith was a member of the Town Company, as were also four persons named Danford from Geneva, Ill. The town site consisting of 240 acres, was surveyed by N. J. Roscoe, in 1857. The first building on the town site was erected by William Wilson, in 1857, and was used for a dwelling. It was of logs. The next building was a frame one erected by Charles Barnes, and occupied for a store and post office, Mr. Barnes being the first Postmaster at Mound City. This building was completed January 30, 1858. The lumber for this store was sawed at Trego & Smiths' mill. A few months thereafter, James F. Matheny completed a boarding house. In April, 1858, Edwin Smith and Dr. Trego each completed a dwelling house, and in June, T. E. Smith completed his, these being the first three frame residences erected. In the summer, W. H. Barnes started the first blacksmith shop.

The first physician in Mound City was Dr. Lee, who came in 1856; the first lawyer, Addison Danford, in 1857; the second, J. F. Broadhead, in 1858. A. A. Johns was the first teacher, who taught in the winter of 1858–59, in the Town Hall erected in the summer of 1858. The first sermon preached here was in the spring of 1855, by Elder Mark Robertson, a Methodist minister. Rev. Josiah Terrell, a United Brethren minister, preached in 1857.

The first birth was that of John F. Barnes, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Barnes, October 3, 1858; the first marriage, that of J. S. Atkinson to Miss Maria Mannington, in 1858, and the first death, that of Ebenezer Barnes, October 17, 1858.

The first Fourth of July celebration was held at Sugar Mound in 1858. At least one thousand people were present, having come from all directions many miles. W. P. Tomlinson was Orator of the Day. A grand barbacue was a notable feature of the celebration, but the ox that was roasted proved to small to feed the assembled multitude.

The Methodist Church was organized in Mound City at an early day, but the records of the church being lost, but little of its history prior to 1870 can be learned. In that year, they erected a neat frame church building at a cost of $1,500, and are the only church that has kept up regular religious services throughout their history. This they have been enabled to do through their itineracy system. The other churches having but few members have each found the support of a minister too great a burden to bear. The Baptists have a substantial brick church, erected in 1867, at a cost of about $4,000, and the Congregationalists have a good frame church building erected in 1867 at a cost of $2,700. The expense of building this church, and of sustaining it since, has been borne to a considerable extent by persons outside of all church connection.

The United Brethren commenced the erection of a church edifice in 1863; but becoming financially embarrassed when the frame only was completed sold it to a Ladies' Enterprise Association, which completed the building and converted it into a free church and schoolhouse. In 1866, it was purchased by the county, and when the county seat has been in Mound City, it has been used as the court house.

LOCAL MATTERS.

City Government.—The government of the city was placed in the hands of a Board of Trustees, December 27, 1870. The first board consisted of T. Ellwood Smith, Chairman; E. W. Bartleson, S. L. Ives and W. R. Biddle.

W. R. Biddle was elected Clerk. The form of government was changed to a city of the third class June 20, 1871, at which time S. M. Brice was elected Mayor, and George B. Dennison, T. E. Smith, C. H. Richardson and D. F. Park, Councilmen. The first meeting of this council was held June 29, 1871. The subsequent Mayors and the dates of their election are as follows: C. H. Richardson, 1872; S. H. Hibbs, 1873; O. P. Watson, 1874–75; Edward R. Smith, 1876; E. W. Bartleson, 1877; Robert Kincaid, 1878; O. P. Watson, 1879; E. W. Bartleson, 1880; E. F. Campbell, 1881; Robert Kincaid, 1882.

Mound City at present contains three general stores, two hardware stores, two drug stores; one stove and tin shop, one grocery, one bank, one lumber yard, four blacksmith shops, three carpenter shops, three hotels, one furniture store, two wagon shops, one good stone schoolhouse, built at a cost of $6,000, and a population of 550.

The Press.—The Border Sentinel was commenced April 1, 1864, by J. T. & J. D. Snoddy. J. T. Snoddy died on the 21st of the same month, and J. D. Snoddy continued the publication of the paper until March 25, 1865. At this time Frank B. Smythe became associated with Mr. Snoddy, and on May 25 took full control of the paper, continuing until October 13, when Mr. Snoddy again assumed control. On the 24th of August, 1866, Joel Moody bought the paper and published it until March 28, 1868, when he sold it to Nathan G. Barter, who continued its publication until January, 1874, when it was removed to Fort Scott. The Linn County Herald, the first paper published in the county, was started at Mound City, April 1, 1859, by Jonathan Lyman; after being published one year the name was changed to the Mound City Report, and J. F. Broadhead became editor. In the spring of 1861, R. B. Mitchell bought the press, moved it to Mansfield and started the Mansfield Shield and Banner. This paper was published by Mr. Lyman until the spring of 1862, when it was suspended, and the press sold and moved to Baldwin City. The Linn County Enterprise was started by J. J. McCallum, April 1, 1873. July 4, 1875, he sold one-half interest to W. C. Hanchett, and on the 11th of November the press was sold to T. L. Darlow, of Pleasanton. In January, 1876, J. C. Cannon and T. B. Van Buskirk, bought the press and started the Linn County Clarion, February 1, with Dr. S. M. Brice editor. Dr. Brice bought Cannon out January 1, 1877. Brice & Van Buskirk continued the publication of the Clarion until they sold it to R. B. Bryan, its present editor.

PLEASANTON.

This flourishing town of twelve hundred inhabitants, the largest in Linn County, is situated on the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad, twenty-four miles north of Fort Scott. The surrounding country is valley, hills being visible at various distances in all directions.

The building of Pleasanton commenced in the summer of 1869, when the coming of the above-mentioned railroad was assured. There never was any town company organized, and the town site, which previously was owned by a considerable number of private individuals, seems to have been selected by common consent.

The town site was laid out in the summer of 1869, and the first town lot was sold in July. Shortly after this time, a hotel was built on Main street by John Butler; William E. Talbott started a general store; Park & Vanzandt a hardware store; Dr. Bender a drug store; Kincaid & Co. a general store, and other businesses also were started before the railroad was completed to the town. There were built also a considerable number of small temporary dwelling houses, and the second hotel was erected by Morgan Ficus the same year. In the spring of 1870, larger and more commodious residences began to be built; one by Mr. Medberry, which was the first good house in town, and others in the north part of town, by William Hudsley, A. F. Hawley and John Haynes. The town grew very rapidly for the first three or four years, until it acquired a population of eight hundred, from which time until 1878 it made but little progress.

The first lawyers in Pleasanton were George Godfrey, M. N. Lewis, and W. P. Winfree, all of whom located before S. H. Allen, who came February 1, 1870. The first physician was R. J. Peare, in August, 1869; the second, Henry Plumb, in the fall. The first sermon in town was preached by Rev. John Kimsey, July 4, 1869.

City Government.—On the 29th of October, 1869, the town of Pleasanton was incorporated, and a Board of Trustees appointed, consisting of Dr. Henry Plumb, Edger M. Tucker, William E. Talbott, Charles T. Wheaton and Caleb Rhoades. An election was held October 25, 1870, for the purpose of completing the organization of the town as a city of the third class. D. W. Poak was elected Mayor, and C. A. Brackett, A. D. Hyatt, Fred. Wagner, J. R. Fairfield and M. Rainwater, Councilmen. Fred. Wagner was elected Clerk. The subsequent Mayors have been the following: S. Wade, elected in 1871; J. E. Whitman, in 1872 and 1873; Fred. Wagner, in 1874, 1875, 1876 and 1877; D. F. Park, 1878; S. H. Hibbs, 1879; B. F. Blaker, 1880; D. A. Crocker, 1881, and W. S. Everett, in 1882.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

The Presbyterian Church was organized in October, with nine members, by Rev. T. Y. Gardner, of Fort Scott. Rev. J. P. Harsen, who assisted at the organization of the church, was the first pastor, and remained eighteen months. The church was then without a pastor until 1874, when Rev. Jacob Baay was called and remained until 1879. Rev. J. H. Trussell commenced his labors in July, 1880, and remained until October, 1882. The church building, a frame one, was erected in the winter of 1869-70, and cost $2,500. The present membership is thirty-one. A Sunday school was organized in 1869; it has now one hundred and ten scholars enrolled, and sixty-five in average attendance.

Pleasanton Methodist Episcopal Church was organized April 26, 1870, by the election of trustees. Previously, there had been preaching by Rev.
